Contract Bridge
By Josephine Culbertson

NO CO-OPERATION

Many experts, when holding freak hands that are extremely weak defensively, go to great lengths to disguise their distribution and, if possible to set up a defense against the contract which the opponents will probably reach. East's maneuvering in today's deal—and also observe the regrettable lack of imagination exhibited by East's partner.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:
A XYDLBAAXR
is LONGFELLOW

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

THE WARNING

Alas, that warning sorely needed So often are ignored, unheeded! —Old Mother Nature.

Flip the Terrier was barking. He was barking as if trying to bark his head off. It is Flip's way when he is excited. He was excited now. There was no doubt about it. Farmer Brown's boy smiled as he listened.

"If that were Bowser the Hound I would be sure that he found something to get excited over, but Flip can get as excited over nothing as over something. I never know which it is until I look," said he. When there is no one else to talk to he sometimes talks to himself. He calls it thinking out loud.

"I suppose I must go see what he has found now, if anything. I wonder why it is that small folks get excited so much easier than big folks. Just listening to that Dog one might think he had met Buster Bear, when likely as not he has merely chased a Mouse into a hole."

Farmer Brown's boy started on up Laughing Brook toward the sound of that excited barking. Laughing Brook was not yet frozen over, but there was ice here and there along the edge. The Green Forest is lovely in summer but Farmer Brown's boy loves it in winter, too. There is less to see then, but it is easier to see. There is still much of beauty for the eyes that know where to look for it. A strong ruffled beauty that will last and grow, come what may; that will lend of its strength and courage to those who have eyes to see it. Farmer Brown's boy has those eyes and they miss little. Now as he moved light-footed along the bank of Laughing Brook they caught the lifting of a brown leaf on the ground and of another although there was no wind. He stood still watching. Still another leaf was raised. From under it darted some one who looked like a small Mouse, a very small Mouse and disappeared under the leaves as suddenly as he had appeared.

"Teeny Weeny" chuckled Farmer Brown's boy. So it was, Teeny Weeny the Shrew, smallest of all the furry folk in the Green Forest; one of the smallest in all the Great World. Only keen eyes and quick ears would have seen him, for it was for no more than an instant that Teeny Weeny was out from under the leaves.

A little farther along a slender small, brown person slipped into the water and disappeared. A moment or two later he appeared running along the opposite bank, then he vanished among some stones on the shore as suddenly as Teeny Weeny had disappeared under the leaves. It was Billy Mink. "Now you see me! Now you don't!" chuckled Farmer Brown's boy.

Thunderer the Grouse and Mrs. Grouse started him with the roar of their wings. He caught a glimpse of them disappearing among the trees and marveled, as he had many times before, how they could dodge their way among the trees when flying at such speed.

Meanwhile, Flip kept up his barking. He sounded as excited as ever. It seemed a wonder that he didn't get out of breath. Presently he was in sight. He was prancing back and forth along the edge of a small pile of tangled sticks and stuff that had been brought down Laughing Brook when the water was high, and had collected at the edge of a pool. When Flip saw his master he barked harder than ever. It didn't seem possible that he could, but he did. He made short rushes at that pile.

"So you think there is some one in there, do you?" said Farmer Brown's boy, as he peered into the pile of drift wood. "Probably you saw a Mouse run in there. I don't see anything or anybody to get excited about."

He started to pull away some sticks. A growl, an ugly growl, a warning growl, made him step back hastily. Now he could see a face with a black mask across it. It was Bobby Coon.
