death since Chapman's conviction. Friends of the condemned man had sworn vengeance on Hance for giving information against him. It was due to Hance's knowledge of the movements of Chapman that he was arrested. When Chapman was taken into custody by local police early this year, he readily admitted his identity, threatening to "get the man who turned me up for blood money."

Their History.

Gerald Chapman and George Anderson, who now is alleged to have wreaked vengeance in his name have been inseparably linked in crime for years.

Their biggest job was their holdup of a mail truck on Lower Broadway, this city, in October, 1921, in which they took about $2,400,000 in cash, securities and jewels. Apprehended for this crime they were convicted and sentenced to Atlanta penitentiary for terms of 25 years each.

Chapman escaped on April 25, 1923, after one unsuccessful break in which he was shot three times.

With his pal at liberty the prison could not long hold Anderson and he got away shrtly by burrowing under the fifty foot wall.

Police officials believe the two immediately got together again and that both were concerned in planning the looting of the store at New Britain, Conn., in the course of which crime Chapman shot and killed Patrolman James Skely. Chapman was arrested at Muncie, Ind., last January, on information given by Ben Hance, at whose home he, Anderson and Wolfe were staying. Subsequently Hance went to Hartford, Conn., and appeared as one of the chief witnesses for the prosecution in the trial that resulted in Chapman's conviction for the murder of Skelly. After his arrest Chapman repeatedly made known the depth of his feeling against Hance, muttering threats to "get the man who turned me up for blood money."

Anderson is believed to have known of this feeling and to have sworn to reap vengeance for his pal.

Sir Adam Beck

town of Berlin, now of Kitchener, in 1910. The second transmission line was built to Toronto. Beck continued to represent London in the legislature until 1919 when he went down with the Conservative party in the Provincial general election. He was retained by the Drury U. F. O. Labor Government however, as chairman of the Power Commission, in which capacity he at that time paid a salary of $18,000 a year.

Sir Adam Beck's plans in Hydro affairs met with set-backs under the Drury United Farmer Government, particularly with reference to Hydro Electric Railways. A Royal Commission, after several months of investigations, recommended against building certain radial railways under provincial guarantees, and thereby took issue with the Hydro Commission and Sir Adam Beck. This report caused a certain division between Sir Adam and the government when the latter made it clear that they were inclined to accept the Royal Commissiona's report as the one to follow.

Then there was the break over the cost of the Chippawa project and while the Drury Government did not stop the work there it held up the later advance of three and a half million dollars until the legislature could vote on it. Sir Adam defended the stand of the Hydro Commission with characteristic vigor, attacked the Royal Commission's report and defended the Hydro Commissions' expenditures.

Sir Adam had very wide interests an probably was the best known man in his native Province. He was Mayor of London, from 1902 to 1904. He was President of the Union of Municipalities in 1904, and held office in various local associations. Known far and wide for his interest in thoroughbred horses, Sir Adam was a promoter of the Canadian Jockey Club and was Master of the London Hunt Club. He was knighted in 1914.

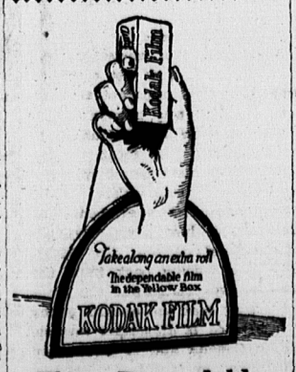

Lady Beck, to whom he was married in 1898, was an expert horsewoman, also an owner of thoroughbreds. With her husband she was prominent at the leading horse shows in London, England, and in the United States and Canada. Lady Beck died on October 17, 1921.

During the war Sir Adam Beck rendered valuable service to the cause of the Allies as Director of Remounts. He personally supervised the purchase of army horses for the Canadian Forces.

In the earlier period of his life, while extending his operations as a manufacturer, Adam Beck's health was threatened by overwork and he was advised by his physician to spend more time in the open walking or riding. He hired a hack horse at a livery stable. After a few rides on this animal, which never had done anything more exciting than to haul people to the railway station and the cemetery, the young manufacturer discovered that the horse could scale a fence fairly easily, so Mr. Beck bought him. This horse, known as Rosebery, developed into a famous jumper under the skilful management of his new owner, and he won prizes in Canada, the United States and England. This was Sir Adam's first start as a horse expert.

Sir Adam Beck's first experience in public matters was obtained as a hospital trustee in London, Ont., where he resided for about 30 years. He was prominent in promoting the Byron Sanitarium near London and the handsome residence for the nurses in connection with that institution was the gift of Sir Adam and Lady Beck.

One daughter of Sir Adam Beck, Marion, survives. She is the wife of Major Strathearn Hay, of Toronto.

Queen Square Wins From Georgetown High School Nine

Last Friday afternoon the Queen Square School ball team journeyed to Georgetown and despite the fact tha it was misting on the arrival there, a good ball game was played although it only went six innings on account of darkness which fell quickly. The final score stood 6 to 2 for Q. S. S.

Though the High School boys were beaten, they put up a hard fight for the game. "Leather" Lavers hurled a good game but he was touch for more hits than Connors and what hits were made off "Putty" were taken care of by the Q. S. S. boys.

The town boys went to bat first but were unable to score, even though a runner reached third. The Georgetown team pushed a run across in this innings. In the second innings neither side scored. The first run for Q. S. S. was made in the third, while Georgetown scored once more. The fourth saw tight playing and no tallies were made. In the fifth the Queen Square boys started an assault which netted them four runs. The High School boys were blanked and the town boys secured their final run in the first of the sixth and again the G. H. S. boys were blanked in their last turn at bat. The game was then called on account of darkness.

Mr. Hudson Morrissey as umpire and Mr. Leo McDonald as basejudge handed out satisfactory decisions.

Central Christian Church

Speaking last night in the Central Christian church Rev. Neil Herman took as his subject: "Wilt thou be made whole?" and said in part:

The world tonight is mentally sick. Like this poor, impotent man, at the pool of Bethesda, we have handed our thinking over to the crowd—our particular crowd—and the crowd is doing with us just about as it pleases.

Great national issues are handled by a few experts, they hammer out their opinions and their programmes and pass them on, and we swallow them and look wise.

In the great industrial strife of our day a few leaders formulate their mandates and hand them out to the rank and file and these ultimatums are considered the last word in wisdom and Godalmightiness, and the consequence is all manner of disorders and every type of industrial confusion from a strike to a riot ending in blood and death.

A few social lights take upon themselves the divine prerogative of laying down the law for our social order. We follow the leadings of these social prophets with the obedience of social slaves, with the result that we are spending our days in a fool's paradise and our social fabric is cracking under the weight of its own folly.

We gloat over some foolish—and oftimes indecent picture—and pronounce it fit and good because such a picture was passed by a board of censors. Our morals have become poor and emaciated because we refuse to think for ourselves.

In our denominational life how frequently it happens that a few men—leaders of our own making—sit down and legislate for thousands and tens of thousands of church members, and the occupants of the unthinking pews are willing to follow such legislation as a flock of sheep, not daring to call their souls their own. New creeds are written and swallowed and no discussion is raised and men and women, for fear of being called disturbers of the peace, are willing to become the slaves of a man made religion, that must pass when the light of thought and the power of the spirit are brought to bear upon such mere human creations.
