Turn Hair Dark With Sage Tea

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens so Naturally Nobody can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

IN THE BEGINNING
CHAPTER I.

I was born in a little mid-western town, and had lived there all my life. My home was a long, narrow, white building shaped a good deal like the toy Noah's arks they sell to amuse children. There was a small, unpretentious entrance, which opened into a shallow hall. The interior was as unpretentious as the entrance, yet it was in every way comfortable.

The house was set almost in the center of a large lawn ("yard", we called it.) In the season it was filled with flowers of all kinds, in not very symmetrical beds, and in borders along the walks that led both to the front and back door. Then there were flowering shrubs and bushes set down haphazard, and several large trees. When everything was in bloom it was a very attractive looking place. But in the late fall and winter when the wind whistled through the shrubs and rocked the giant branches of the trees, stripped naked of their summer dress, the long, low, white house had rather a pathetic look. I hated the winter. It was always so unattractive in Huntington, where many of the houses were almost a replica of the one in which we lived, and where the streets so beautifully shaded in summer by the interlaced shade trees, were bleak and unattractive because of the bare trunks and branches of those same trees.

I used to think that there could be no other place in the world where the wind howled and groaned, as if in agony, as it did in Huntington. But as my experiences afield had been only to neighboring towns, I was perhaps incapable of judging. Yet now after years of city living I still shudder when I think of the way the wind whistled and moaned through the trees and shrubs in my old home.

Father kept a small store. We never knew what it was to really want for anything; yet mother counted every penny. I never had an allowance because there was only just so much, and nothing must be wasted. Yet as I look back it is the only criticism I would make of my father and mother. They brought me up without allowing me to handle a penny, or to use my judgment in spending. Mother bought my clothes and we made them together. If I had any little extras, as I grew older, she always got them for me.

I sometimes read stories of girls who had an allowance that they were permitted to spend exactly as they chose. These stories always made me envious, and I would wish I too, might have money of my own to spend. Then I would weave dreams of the time when I would be married and I, like mother, would buy for the family. But strangely I never dreamed of any of the town boys as a possible husband. I had played and danced—gone to school and Sunday School with them, and in a way was very fond of them, as one is in a small town where the boys and girls grow up together. But whenever I thought of marriage, it was not with one of them.

I was just twenty-two the summer that Neil Forbes came to visit his aunt. She lived next door to us, and I met Neil almost immediately. There is very little ceremony in a place like Huntington. I was coming home from the store carrying a parcel for mother, when I passed Mrs. Carter's gate she called to me: "Come in, Bab. I want you to meet my nephew!" My real name was Barbara, Barbara Hill; but everyone called me "Bab."

"Neil, this is my neighbor, Barbara Hill," was the way she introduced us. A very common way in Huntington. "I am glad to meet Miss Hill," a pleasant voice said, and as I laid my hand in the one he extended I looked into the handsome face of the only young man I ever had seen who in any way fulfilled my girlish ideals of what a husband should be. (Tomorrow—The Glamour of a College Educator.)

others spiritually and socially. He also said that he would always remember the pleasant evenings spent with the society, and if we should not meet again on earth, that we should meet together in a happier land where "We shall know Him by the print of the nails in His hand". The meeting was then brought to a close by singing "God be with you till we meet again".

Dear Mr. McKay: It is with much regret that we learn of your intention to leave us in the near future. Since you came to live in our midst seven years ago, we very much appreciated you as a good progressive citizen and highly esteemed neighbor. The amount of good which you have done, we cannot estimate. As a citizen of the community you have always been in favor of anything that tended to progress. Your merchantile business, we feel has been of the greatest advantage and benefit to us. The interest which you have taken in the community life has been manifested in many different ways. Among these we would mention the instruction which you gave as singing master for two or three winters. But most important of all we are grateful to you for the interest you took in the different branches of church work in the Sunday School you have done everything to make it successful as a place of religious instruction to the boys and girls of our community. In the work of the Christian Endeavour Society which was organized largely through your exertions, we know we are losing a most valued member. A community can ill afford to lose any one of its citizens, but when we recollect the prominence you have held in our midst, and the zeal you have manifested in everything that means progress, we are at a loss to understand how your place as a citizen can be filled.

To you, Mrs. McKay we tender our regrets at your leaving. We have seen with what earnestness you have acted your part in the work of the church, especially in the Sunday School where you have been a teacher since you came to us.

In conclusion we ask you to accept this little gift; not for its value, but as a token of the esteem we have for you. Accept also our most earnest hope that you all may be blessed with health and prosperity wherever you may make your home.

(Signed on behalf of) The Young People's Christian Endeavour Society.

Tired, Nervous Women What You Need is Vinol

The reason we recommend Vinol so strongly for such conditions is because it is a non-secret remedy which contains Beef and Cod Liver Peptones, Iron and Manganese Peptonates and Glycerophosphates, the very elements needed to build up a run-down system and replace weakness with strength.

Glasgow Jct., Ky.
"I was suffering from a nervous breakdown—loss of flesh and poor appetite so I could hardly drag around and do the work for my family. My doctor prescribed Vinol. It not only made me well and strong but I have gained in weight."—Mrs. S. M. Gray.
Milwaukee, Wis.
"I was weak, nervous, all run down, no appetite and had taken different medicines without benefit. A friend advised me to try Vinol. It gave me a wonderful appetite, I sleep well, have gained in weight and am now strong and well."—Mrs. E. Strey.
For all run-down, nervous, anemic conditions, weak women, overworked men, feeble old people and delicate children, there is no remedy like Vinol.

Vinol Creates Strength

Vinol is sold in Montague by H. J. Mabon and at the best drug store in every town and city in the country.

"He's Just Perfect!"

This exclamation of Barbara Forbes, is the eternal cry of the real wife when all the world turns against her husband. Although she, herself, may have opposed and criticized him, she is his staunch ally when the rest of the world fails him.

So, although Barbara had pitied herself above all women when she had discovered that Neil's business methods were not always laudable ones—although she had thought herself the most wretched of wives when she had had to entertain Neil's questionable business associates—still, with his creditors at the door and the arm of a vengeful world about to strike him down, she stood before her husband and, with flashing eyes, declared that he was the finest man on earth!

But Neil Forbes, sanguine and visionary by temperament, had made mistakes. There was no doubt of that. He did deserve punishment. He had chosen a crooked path; and it is just that we should suffer for our errors.

Barbara, however, was determined that he should not suffer—that she would protect him. And we all know the strength of that determination which lies at the heart of a woman who loves. So it appears that Barbara will save her husband from shipwreck, doesn't it?

To make sure of this, read "The Promoter's Wife" which begins this week in The Charlottetown Guardian.
