SEPTEMBER GLORIOUS MONTH IN HISTORY OF BRITAIN

September is about the most glorious month in the history for the triumph of British arms on land and sea. On September 2, 1898, the British troops under Lord Kitchener, now Secretary of War, secured Sudan by the victory of Omdurman. Malta was captured on September 5, 1800. Queen Elizabeth, under whom Drake and other famous sea-dogs served, was born on September 7, 1533.

The fall of Sebastopol came on September 8, 1855, when the British and their Allies, the French, were vindicated in the Crimean campaign. On the same day in 1700 a treaty of peace was made with Iroquois at Montreal. The battle of Malplaquet, in Malborough's Spanish Succession campaign, was dated September 10, 1709.

Premier Asquith was born the following day of 1852.

On September 13, 1759, the battle of the Plains of Abraham, Quebec, was won in the hour of General Wolfe's death. The victory of Tel-el-Kebir was achieved on the corresponding day of 1882. September 15, 1852, the Duke of Wellington, hero of Waterloo, died; and a dreadnought, the Iron Duke, perpetuates his memory in the British Navy.

Cape Town was acquired from the Dutch East India Company, September 16, 1795. Quebec was surrendered to the British on September 18, 1759. The battle of Alma was another British victory in the Crimea, September 20, 1854. Sir Philip Sydney died September 22, 1586.

September 23, 1857, is notable in Indian Mutiny annals for the death of General Nicholson at Delhi, after his troops had gained a complete victory over the mutineers. Lucknow was heroically relieved by General Havelock, September 25, 1857.

The Dutch navy under Van Tromp, who made history if only by carrying a broom tied to his masthead with which he did not sweep the English from the seas—was defeated by Admiral Blake (who originated the famous whip signal flag) on September 28, 1652.

Horatio Nelson, hero for all time of the British Navy, was born on September 29, 1758.

SANG SCOTTISH SONGS IN THICK OF THE BATTLE.

LONDON, September 6.—A corporal and two privates of the "Black Watch," the famous Scottish regiment, all wounded, have just arrived in London from the front. They were surrounded by and rescued by a crowd in the West End. The corporal, telling how his regiment fought, said: "In the thick of it we were singing Harry Lauder's latest 'Aye, 'twas Grand.' All around us were dead and dying. Every now and then German shells burst and as we peeped away at 'em we sang 'Boamin' in the gloamin' and the 'Lass of Killbuckin'."

Somebody in the crowd asked what the Jews were doing. The Highlander replied: "Their duty. We had three with us and bonnier, braver lads I don't wish to see. They fought just splendid."

A private in a Berkshire regiment added: "We had ten in our company—all good fighters—and six won't be seen again."

A SOCIALIST PROPHET

GERMANY AND ENGLAND

BY ROBERT BLATCHFORD.

The author of these articles is the best-known leader of the English Socialists, and is one of the founders of the modern Socialist movement in Great Britain. Under the nom de guerre of "Nunquam" he wrote "Merrie England," of which one and a half million copies have been sold. He is editor of the "Clarion," which is by general consent the ablest and most influential of Socialist journals; and he is master of a style that for vigour and terseness has been surpassed by no English writer since the days of Cobbett. The article was contributed to The Ill. London Daily Mail in 1908, six years ago.

EVIDENCES OF GERMAN HOSTILITY.

Bismark's famous declaration that the destinies of Germany were to be worked out not by votes and speeches, but by blood and iron, is the soul of the German policy. Let those who credit Germany with a lamb-like nature ponder that grim phrase, and weigh it in conjunction with the following historic facts.

In 1862 Bismark became Prime Minister of Prussia. He immediately forced through the Reichstag an Army reorganization scheme. Moltke and Von Roon recognized the Army. In 1864 Prussia attacked Denmark, and gave Kiel to Prussia. In 1866 Prussia attacked and defeated Austria, crushing the Austrians in six weeks and annexing Hanover, Hesse, and Nassau. In 1870 Bismark altered the Ems telegram, and Prussia fought and defeated the French, and annexed Alsace and Lorraine. The French paid also an indemnity of 200 million. The result of this war was the formation of the largest and most scientific Army in Europe. Such was the policy of blood and iron.

Is there any reason to suppose that the nation which attacked Denmark, Austria, and France would hesitate to attack us if their interests dictated the step and they felt sure of victory? Is Germany under William II. more lamb-like than Prussia under Bismark?

There is the Kruger telegram. Was that or was it not a hostile act against Britain? And there was the significant speech of the Emperor just afterwards, in which he said, "The Trident must be in our fist."

Then came the fierce outbreak of Anglophobia during the Boer war, and again the Emperor voiced the general feeling by saying: "We are in bitter need of a strong German Navy. . . . If the increased demand during the first years of my reign had not been continually refused to me . . . how differently should we be able to further interests overseas."

Then came the German Navy Bill, which laid the foundations of Germany's naval power. The preamble to the Bill was fairly suggestive, but said less than the Kaiser had said in a telegram to his brother: "I will never rest until I have raised the German Navy to the position which the German Army holds today." The premier position. The position which would reduce Great Britain to the rank of a third class Power.

But the Emperor's speeches were mild and pacific in comparison with the speeches of German statesmen, generals, admirals, and professors. Here is an extract from an article by the great German historian Professor Treitschke:

If our Empire has the courage to follow an independent Colonial policy with determination, a collision of our interests and those of England is unavoidable. It was natural and logical that the new Great Power of Central Europe had to settle affairs with all Great Powers. We have settled our accounts with Austria-Hungary.

with France, and with Russia. The last settlement, the settlement with England, will probably be the lengthiest and most difficult.

A year after the Boer war began Von der Goltz wrote in the Deutsche Rundschau:

The material foundations of our power are broad enough to warrant the thought of successful operation to British supremacy; Germany must meet this war if it comes—and must lose no time in making her preparations.

In how many novels, speeches, articles, and pamphlets have German soldiers and civilians declared the national hope and purpose of destroying British naval supremacy and breaking up the British Empire? Their name is legion.

The national enthusiasm for Count Zepelin arises mainly from the hope that German war balloons may be able to destroy the British fleet and leave this country open to an irresistible German invasion in force. No sooner does a German succeed in flying a hundred miles in an airship than the artist and writers of the Fatherland are busy with tales and pictures of German air fleets raining down destruction upon British squadrons.

Is Germany as pacific and dove-like as British Liberals and Labourists believe? What of the humiliation of France during the Morocco trouble, when Germany threatened to invade France unless M. Delcasse were compelled to resign office? What of the German humiliation of Russia during the recent squabble in the Balkans? It is the policy of blood and iron, or, to use a more modern phrase, the policy of the "Mailed Fist."

The German Navy League was founded upon the passing of the German Navy Act. Of this organization the Quarterly Review says: "The German 'Flottenverein' or Navy League boasts a million members and is the largest and most spirited patriotic organization of its kind that has ever existed in any country. It draws its adherents from all parts of the Empire. It is strong in the South German cities like Munich and in the northern seaports. It is filled with Pan-Germanic feeling, and it is of course, saturated with anti-British sentiment. The open aim of this organization is the eventual achievement of naval supremacy. The aim would mean, in 'Our German Cousins,' a Daily Mail publication, I read:

It was a close imitation of the British Navy League, but with this difference, that it enjoyed from the first the patronage of all the German royalists. Prince Henry of Prussia became its patron, and the leaders of the German nobility enrolled themselves in its ranks. It grew in strength with marvellous rapidity, till today it numbers over a million members. Till the circulation of its journal Die Flotte reaches nearly half a million, till its publications and maps are seen throughout Germany, in barber's shops, in hotels, in railway stations. It maintains armies of lecturers; it gives cinematographic shows everywhere. While the British Navy League has a revenue of only about £3,500, the German Navy League has a revenue exceeding £50,000. For more than ten years it has carried out an educational campaign throughout Germany in favor of an all-powerful fleet, until today its work is practically done.

One million members; imperial and aristocratic support of an organization which is Pan-Germanic and anti-British.

Who has forgotten the Emperor's action after the Japanese war with China, when France and Russia and Germany handed Port Arthur over to Russia? And what of the little attempt of our German cousins to raise a coalition of Germany, France, and Russia against us?

And that toast drunk every night in every German warship, "To the day," a friendly and pacific toast to the day when the German Fleet in the North Sea; how do the peace party relish that toast?

Three years ago the British made proposals for a restriction of naval armaments. That was at the time of the Hogue Conference. Germany declined to consider such proposals.

And when the British made more or less tentative suggestions to the same effect to Germany, the offer was rejected with contempt.

Still, the Liberal Government were loath to accept the situation. They would not believe in the alleged magnitude and celerity of the German naval increase; they held back the construction of British Dreadnoughts; and they found that Germany had secretly rushed her naval preparations in the hope of stealing a march on us.

So much for the historic evidence of German hostility. Let us take next the evidence of our own action.

In the preamble to the German Navy Act stress was laid upon the fact that our fleets must in peace and war be scattered over the world.

WOMAN WOULD NOT GIVE UP

Though Sick and Suffering; At Last Found Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Richmond, Pa. — "When I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was in a dreadful rundown state of health, had internal troubles, and was so extremely nervous and prostrated that if I had given in to my feelings I would have been in bed. As it was I had hardly strength at times to be on my feet and what I did do was by a great effort. I could not sleep at night and of course felt very bad in the morning, and had a steady headache.

"After taking the second bottle I noticed that the headache was not so bad, I rested better, and my nerves were stronger. I continued its use until it made a new woman of me, and now I can hardly realize that I am able to do so much as I do. Whenever I know any woman in need of a good medicine I highly praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. FRANK CLARK, 3146 N. Tulip St., Richmond, Pa.

Women Have Been Telling Women for forty years how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored their health when suffering with female ills. This accounts for the enormous demand for it from coast to coast. If you are troubled with any ailment peculiar to women why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? It will pay you to do so. Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

While the German fleet could be concentrated in the North Sea. Very well; we brought home ships from the Mediterranean and from the China station, and we gradually concentrated most of our naval strength in home waters. The strategic base of our Navy today is the North Sea. When I began to write on the German menace five years ago we had no fleet in the North Sea. Couple together the German statement that our fleet must be scattered and the million members, till the circulation of its journal Die Flotte reaches nearly half a million, till its publications and maps are seen throughout Germany, in barber's shops, in hotels, in railway stations. It maintains armies of lecturers; it gives cinematographic shows everywhere. While the British Navy League has a revenue of only about £3,500, the German Navy League has a revenue exceeding £50,000. cause for anxiety as to German intentions in the facts within our own knowledge.

The Ministers and ex-Ministers of the King must in the nature of things possess knowledge which we lack; and they are anxious, and warn the country of impending dangers. Are we to believe that they are mistaken? Or is it reasonable to assume that the King's political, naval, and military advisors are better informed than the Labour members and Mr. Winston Churchill?

Very well; let us now consider the evidence of facts.
