THE seventeenth annual lecture course in St. James' Hall was most auspiciously opened last evening in presence of a splendid audience by Rev. James Carruthers of New Glasgow. For over an hour and a half he held the close attention of all, rippling with merriment from time to time as he discoursed upon humor and Shakesperian Humor. After introductory remarks on humor in the abstract, specimens of Scotch, Irish, English and American humor were given, closing with an admirably rendered recital from Artemus Ward. Shakespear's humor was treated analytically, showing its development through different plays until it reached its full proportions in Falstaff. Mr. Carruthers possesses true dramatic insight and rare powers of impersonation. His recitals from the Midsummer Night's Dream and especially from Falstaff were admirably rendered and greatly enjoyed.

Address and Presentation.

On the twenty fifth evening of October a large number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. D. B. McLeod of Elliotts Station called upon them at their home to bid them farewell on the eve of their departure from the Province. Mr. and Mrs. McLeod were completely surprised as carriage after carriage drove up to the door with their smiling occupants. The ladies came amply provided with baskets packed with the choicest delicacies. An hour of pleasant chat and the ladies took charge and spread a sumptuous table to which upwards of forty sat down and did ample justice. Supper being over Daniel M. McDonald Esq. of Hopedale on behalf of the assembled friends and some who were unavoidably absent presented Mr. McLeod with an appreciative address expressive of their regard, together with a fine eight day clock and Mrs. McLeod, with a beautiful silver sugar bowl, one dozen silver teaspoons and one silver berry spoon.

Mr. McLeod in accepting the address with the beautiful presents that accompanied it made a short speech in reply, thanking his friends for the many kindnesses shown him in the past as well as on the present memorable occasion when at the parting of the ways their kindness was again so generously expressed to Mrs. McLeod and himself. He felt pleased that his humble efforts as a member of the community had been so fully appreciated and trusted that his future life would never give any cause to regret the deep confidence placed in him. He cordially reciprocated the good wishes expressed in the address and felt he could not say farewell to the friends of a life-time without many regrets, but he hoped that the future would from time to time present opportunities for the renewal of the pleasant associations of the past.
