Slayer Prowls Through Times Square Shadows

Peer behind the scenes of gray Broadway as a slayer prowls the Times Square shadows and polices for the killer. Wolves and lambs alike become his victims as a terror grips the Big Town. Match with the strangest killer who ever threw New York into turmoil! "Murder in Times Square" will give you the chill of your life when mysterious murders uncover the secret lives and romances of Broadway stars!

Meet the suspects in the year's most fascinating mystery thriller — Edmund Lowe, as an actor-wright — Marguerite Chapman, as a beautiful press agent — John Litel, as a famous physician — Bruce Bennett, as a western cowboy — Sidney Blackmer, as a prominent press agent — and Douglas Leavitt, as a wealthy "angel".

All these amazing characters come to life in Columbia's exciting "Murder in Times Square" which is opening to-night at the Empire Theatre. Directed and acted from the screen play by Paul Gangelin.

New Range Tune

Tex Ritter, co-starring with Johnny Mack Brown in Universal's "The Lone Star Trail," coming today to the Capitol Theatre, sings a new range tune in the outdoor adventure drama. The film, titled "I Gotta See Texas Just Once More," was written specially for the film by Jimmy Wakely and Dick Reinhart.

Three other songs are featured by the Jimmy Wakely Trio which is recognized as one of the most popular vocal and instrumental aggregates appearing in motion pictures.

Fuzzy Knight and Jennifer Holt have leading roles in the supporting cast of "The Lone Star Trail." The film was directed by Ray Taylor. Musical direction by associate producer.

CORNWALL-YORK POINT INSTITUTE

The July meeting of Cornwall-York Point Institute met at the home of Mrs. Gordon MacEwen, York Point, with an attendance of 29 members and several visitors. It was decided to hold a dance in York Point School and to have a sale of lunches. Misses Margaret Donahue and Isabel Howard attended to musical part of programme.

This Institute appointed collectors to go around the two districts to collect for "Greek Relief Fund" and the generous response showed a total of $76 collected and this amount was passed into the manager of Bank of Montreal to be forwarded to head office. The money collected was credited to each district separately ($38.00 to Cornwall district and $40.00 to York Point district) and not to the Institute.

Mrs. Clifford Bain, Mrs. Wm. Butler and Mrs. Pearl White consented to make pyjamas for Red Cross and materials given out. Programme committee met next meeting. Mrs. O. C. MacEachern and Mrs. Douglas MacDonald. The next meeting to be held at home of Mrs. Wm. Butler, York Point. The total collection at last meeting $88.00. Several members paying their $1.00 fee towards ring fund.

Canned Chicken to be sold by Grade

When a housewife wants a can of chicken after September 1, 1943, she will no longer select it by guesswork—but by grade. This is the result of recent Dominion Department of Agriculture regulations governing the packing, grading and making of canned poultry canners are able again to get supplies of tin, the metal in which the cans are made, and the product either Grade 1 or Grade 2 for interprovincial and export shipment—and these grades will tell the consumer exactly what she is buying. Misuse of the regulation terms is prohibited no matter where the product is sold.

Grade 1 canned chicken means that the meat is produced from chicken making the highest quality of canned product. The meat will make up from 50 to 55 per cent of the total weight of the can. The remainder of the can is filled with broth in which the meat has been precooked and which also must be of definite quality.

The Department officers point out that the grading of canned poultry is a development of the poultry grading of dressed chickens which it introduced some years ago. A consumer accustomed to buying with confidence dressed and graded chickens will have the same assurance in buying canned poultry.

In devising these regulations, which cover not only chicken but all kinds of poultry canned and after September 1, the Department has received assistance and co-operation in the technical aspects of grading from the National Research Council and has been in consultation with the canned poultry trade.

CHAPTER XXV

The following morning, Jim had another talk with Senora Mario. Afterward, he sought out Tracy. "I've had a long talk with the Senora," he told her. "I tried to find out what her fear is, but she wouldn't tell me. However, I managed to learn that Ramon is behind it."

Tracy started. "Ramon—oh, no!" Her face had no real doubt. "I don't know what he did or said," Jim went on, "but I'm sure he caused her illness. Think he's behind this other business, too—this Jose business."

Tracy nodded, but her eyes were troubled. "After a moment, Jim said, 'I'd like to go into town, if I may borrow your car.'"

Of course, I could drive you into Lanassa, and do some shopping. Or— Tracy paused. "Or perhaps you'd rather have some one else drive you in. Ruth, for instance."

Jim detected the barred note in her voice and realized that she was annoyed because of the interest he had been showing in Ruth. Strange, he thought. She claimed to hate the word 'sell me' and yet she resented his attentions to another girl.

"I'd like nothing better than to go with you," assured her. "Thanks very much."

As they went out to the garage together, they saw Juan tinkering with the motor of his plane on the stretch of ground which had been laid out as a land field. Jim felt a sudden regret for his plane on the stretch of ground which had been laid out as a land field. Jim felt a sudden regret for his plane on the stretch of ground which had been laid out as a land field.

Jim drove fast. The top of the car was down, and the blazing Arizona sun was hot. They didn't talk at all, but, finally, Tracy broke the silence.

"Ruth knows about you," she said. "I told her yesterday."

"I guess that Jim replied. "Her manner last night was not exactly cousinly."

"That's the way I supposed?" Again, she was that barred note in Tracy's voice.

Jim glanced at her. "You haven't told me if you should place on a friendly with Ruth. If you wish me to avoid her, you might say so."

Tracy shrugged. "Why shouldn't I? This is a matter of fact, I was occupied with an admirer of my own while you were out walking. I gave Jim an unexpected jolt. He slowed the car and looked at her.

"You don't see Hanlon isn't the man for you," he blurted. "He wouldn't make you the right sort of a husband. He's tough and hard—he'd be likely to break your heart. You wouldn't accept him, would you?"

"What right have you to say anything against Clint? Tracy evaded the question. "You know nothing about him."

"But a man has his hunches about other men, Tracy—and I've mine about Hanlon. I'm sure he isn't really in love with you!"

"Am I so unattractive?" Tracy demanded angrily. "Why shouldn't he be in love with me?"

Jim stopped the car and turned to face her squarely. "It's true I know nothing about him, but I know my reactions to him. I think he's a fortune-hunter. He sees you as a Garrison and, therefore, as a damnable attractive catch."

"I'm not a Garrison."

"You are, in all but name. If you want proof, ask the Senora. Jim wanted her to say who he was, asked, "What did you say to Hanlon?"

She gave him a mocking smile. "Wouldn't you like to know Mr. Conroy?"

As he started the car again and drove on, uneasiness grew within him. Clint Hanlon proposing to Tracy, then the man who stayed with him that Hanlon wanted Tracy only because he knew that, one day, she would be a part-owner of the bank.

Nothing more was said during the remainder of the drive to town. Lanassa was a small place. There was a sleepy-looking main street lined with a few small stores, a bank, a hotel of sorts, a feed warehouse, one or two small restaurants, and a hole in the wall movie house.

Jim parked before the bank, an old false-front frame building. "This is my stop," he told Tracy. "I may be here for half an hour or more. Where shall we meet?"

"If you're longer than half an hour," Tracy said, "look for me in that restaurant across the street."

They climbed from the car and separated.

Just as Jim was about to enter the bank, his eyes were caught by the figure of a man just vanishing into the alley midway down the block. There was something familiar about that figure. Jim hesitated an instant, then shrugged and went on into the bank. Surely his eyes had played a trick on him. The man couldn't have been Phil Garrison.
