Mother's Advice to Her Daughter

Dorothy Dix

World Changes After Marriage

Young Wives Should Remember That They Married He-Men and Not Angels - They Shouldn't Run to Mothers With All Their Troubles

A mother whose daughter was recently married took the girl aside on her wedding eve and gave her this advice: "My dear," she said, "face the fact that your marriage definitely and forever closes one phase of your life. It is the ending of your playtime and the beginning of the serious business of life. Your father and I have petted you, spoiled you, indulged you and tried to make everything as easy for you as we could, but your husband isn't going to sop up the world for you. He is going to expect you to stand up and take things on the chin. You are going to be on your own now. Your fate is in your own hands, and it is going to be what you make it.

"Of course, you are going to have disappointments and you are going to get the surprise of your life in finding out that marriage isn't in the least like what a girl thinks it is going to be. Every girl is sure, no matter what other people's marriages are, hers is going to be a never-ending orgy of romance and a perpetual putting party coupled with a good meal ticket and a steady date. It jars her back teeth loose when she learns that her husband has dropped all love-making at the altar; that he wants to stay at home at night instead of stepping out, and that he expects her to take his affection for granted, which latter is a grand compliment or a cause for tears, according to the way you take it.

"You know that you have always been in the very center of my heart and that nothing in my life has ever given me the happiness that you have. Nevertheless, when you get married, you must cut Mother's apron strings. Mother mustn't be the one you love best, the one you turn to for advice and counsel. If you are to be happy and make your husband happy, you must wean yourself away from Mother.

"There is no other person on earth of whom a young husband can be so jealous as he can be of his wife's mother. He wants to be first in her life. He wants to be her oracle. And when he finds he is running a third second to Mother and that his bride is forever throwing Mother in his teeth and quoting what Mother says and what Mother thinks about this and that, he surely can't stand it. If you want John to like us and be on good terms with us, don't feed him up too much on Mamma and Papa.

"Cultivate your in-laws. Make just as great an effort to win the heart of your mother-in-law as you did to win that of her son. Every mother-in-law gets green when her son marries, for fear his wife is going to take him away from her, and when this doesn't happen she is ready to fall down in gratitude before her marvelous daughter-in-law.

"So pay up to Mother-in-law. Don't faint John's adoration of you in her face. Don't monopolize him. Make him pay his mother more attention than he has ever done before. Don't always go along when he pays a visit to his mother. Let them have long seasons of talk alone together.

"There is nothing that pays a woman better than making friends with her in-laws because, in the first place, nothing endears a wife to her husband more than getting along peacefully with his mother. And, in the second place, if a mother-in-law likes her, she has always a friend at court who will back her up in any domestic argument instead of an enemy who will always be stabbing her in the back. If mother-in-law sings your praises you will be tops with John, but if she has always got out her hammer for you he will wonder what ever made him marry you.

"Don't be silly enough to think that any amount of beauty or charm or dishing to keep young and slim will take the place of good housekeeping in holding a husband's love. There isn't a man living who won't see a dirty floor before a pretty face if he marries a lady squire, and who doesn't feel more romantic and tender after a good meal than a bad one.

"When nature made men's stomachs many times bigger than their hearts she handed out a tip to wives on how to manage the brutes. Feed 'em. Make 'em comfortable. Turn on the lights. Give a man a bright, cheery, peaceful home, a good dinner to come to and a pleasant wife for company, and you've got him nailed to his own fireside.

"And finally, my dear, never forget you have married a man not a re-angel, and be as kind to his faults as you hope he will be to yours. And bear always in mind that it is the wives who yes-yes their husbands and who sunshine around their peculiarities, instead of fighting with them, who never have to buy tickets to Reno."

MEN'S HAT LOOKS BEST WHEN IT AFFORDS CONTRAST

If a man's hat doesn't look well on him, its color probably does not suit his complexion and ensemble. The tone of the hat should contrast sharply with his suit and freshen his complexion.

THE COOK'S CORNER

HABITANT CHRISTMAS CAKES

Two cups flour, 1-2 cup sugar, 1-4 lb. butter, 1-2 cup chopped sultana raisins, 1-2 cup shredded toasted almonds, 2 eggs, 1 tspn. baking powder, strawberry jam. Cream butter and sugar together, add eggs, lightly beaten, and the flour, sifted with baking powder in alternate spoonfuls. Stir in gently the raisins. Half fill small greased tart tins, and bake in fairly hot oven 15 minutes. When the cakes are done, turn them out of the pans, brush them with the strawberry jam, which has been warmed slightly, and coat them thickly with the toasted, shredded almonds.

MOIST FRUIT CAKE

Eighteen eggs, 2 pounds butter, 2 1-4 pounds brown sugar, 5 pounds currants, 7 pounds seeded raisins, 2 pounds dates, 1 pound almonds (blanched and chopped), 1 1-4 pounds mixed peel (citron, lemon and orange), 1 bottle lemon essence, 2 cups preserved cherries, 2 nutmegs, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 1 cup molasses, 2 teaspoons soda dissolved in a little hot water, 2 1-2 pounds flour, salt to taste. Bake in a slow oven 350 degrees, from two to three hours, according to the size of pan used. As this would make a very large cake, use one-third of the recipe, and bake in small loaf cake pans. This recipe if baked by a slow fire, will make a very moist cake, which will keep nicely in a crock for five or six months.

FRUIT CAKE

One lb. flour; 1 lb. butter; 1 lb. brown sugar; 12 eggs; 1 cup Barbados molasses; 4 tspns. cinnamon; 4 tspns. allspice; 1 1-2 tspns. mace; 2 tspns. grated nutmeg; 1-4 tspns. soda; 3 lbs. seeded raisins, cut in pieces; 1 lb. seedless raisins; 1 1-2 lb. citron, cut into thin strips; 1 lb. currants, washed and dried overnight; dry candied rind of 1 orange; 1-4 cup melted bitter chocolate; 1 cup grape juice; 1 tspn. hot water. Cream the butter, add sugar gradually and beat thoroughly. Add beaten yolks of eggs. Then add flour (except 1-3 cup reserved to dredge fruit) mixed and sifted with spices, finely chopped candied orange peel and fruit dredged with flour; add grape juice and chocolate. Beat egg whites until stiff and dry and add to the cake. Grease and flour pans and cover with greased brown paper, tied down at sides. Steam for 2 hours remove paper covering and bake 1 hour in a slow oven. This will make nearly 14 pounds of cakes.

Adulation Of Princess Elizabeth Fanned By Approach To Throne

Her "Fan Mail" Pours In, Telling an Empire's Hopes

BY MILTON BRONNER

NEA Service Staff Correspondent

LONDON Dec. 15.—Probably the most self-possessed person in the British Empire, in the face of the change that has placed a 10-year-old girl next in line for the throne is the little Princess Elizabeth Alexandra Mary, herself. For 10-going-on-11, the Princess Elizabeth has always accepted her royal position with the utmost composure. She has faced the white light of relentless publicity with all the professional aplomb of a royal Shirley Temple.

Her position before the public of the British Isles irresistibly calls up a comparison with the adulated American film starlet. The "fan mail" received by the little princess has always approximated that directed to Shirley. When she wears a new style or color of dress, British mothers rush to the stores to deck their children out in similar clothes. The flood of chocolates and china, hospital wards and handbags, dresses and dolls, named after the princess is already becoming a deluge.

Her "fan mail" has always been almost as heavy as Shirley Temple's especially at her birthday time (April 21) and at holiday seasons. It has required extra post-office clerks and a special maid to handle, and has in recent weeks become a cloudburst.

READED TO BE QUEEN SINCE BABYHOOD

If there was a single home in the British Isles which did not display a picture of the princess before this week, the deficiency is probably being remedied by a hurried trip to the store today. Princess Elizabeth has faced the camera scarcely less often than the childhood idol of America.

Her first tooth, her first straggles with baby speech, her first intelligible word, her first pony, her first party dress of white chiffon over pink satin her toys, her playthings her dogs, her nursery, her clothes since she began "growing up," all these things have been relayed to an avid British public since that day of her birth 10 years ago.

By chance or premonition, the Princess Elizabeth has been reared from the very moment of her birth as a potential reigning queen. Had her succession been certain, no step in her upbringing would have been different.

WHEN IN LONDON SHE'S SHOWN DAILY

From that birth moment, the white light of publicity has played constantly about the fair golden hair of the princess. There she is different from her illustrious namesake Queen Elizabeth, and even from the great Victoria. Nobody thought they were going to be queens, and their childhood was quite obscure. But on the day of her christening, Princess Elizabeth was carried out on a balcony for adoring crowds to see. Since then, whenever she was staying at the Duke of York's London house at 145 Piccadilly she has been shown to her public daily.

She was early conscious of this public interest in herself. Once it is recorded that she was attending a concert with her royal grandmother. When she stood up in the box to see better, the then Queen Mary reprimanded her conduct and threatened to send her home. "But you couldn't do that," protested the little princess, "and disappoint all the people who are waiting to see me come out." Queen Mary stern and unimpressed, could and did. She had the princess hustled out a back door and sent home with a nurse.

Princess Elizabeth in a regal mood when riding beside her uncle whose abdication as King Edward VIII makes possible her future Queenship.

Closer moves the day when another Queen Elizabeth may rule Britain. With the Duke of York in the role of King, pretty, popular little Princess Elizabeth becomes the heir presumptive to the throne. Here she is shown in an exclusive, new portrait, fondling her pet dog—a child who already has captivated the hearts of millions of her future subjects.

ENJOYS POSITION AMONG ROYALTY

Hence this extremely self-possessed little princess probably "took in her stride" the momentous event which brought her one step nearer the throne. Especially when she is somewhat younger, her understanding of, and satisfaction in, her royal position, was clear.

Servants have always bowed in her presence and visitors to her parents' home have always made a point to curtsy or bow when she entered the room. "Royalty speaking!" she cut in brightly one day when a telephone call was not completed quickly enough.

The days when she was a gold-on-haired baby, and lisped her own name into "Lilibet," are gone.

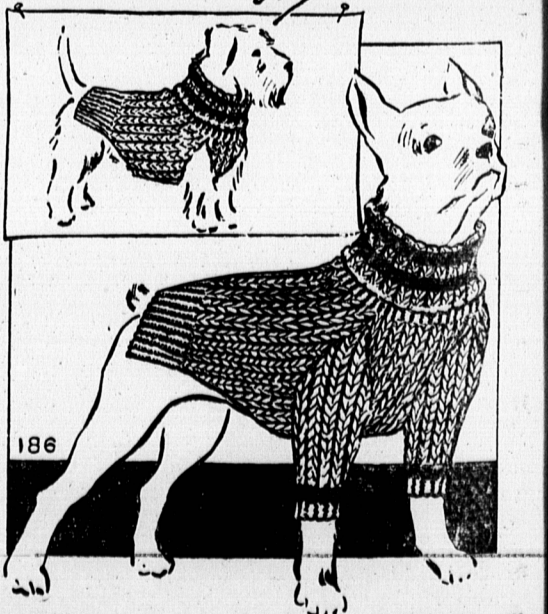

PROPHETICALLY NAMED AS "QUEEN ELIZABETH"

Far more mature than her years, of course, is the princess. When she goes to St. Leonard School, her mother has decided that she shall "gag" for the older girls just like any other student. That means making tea, running errands, and even shining shoes, for those who outrank her in scholastic standing, even if not in blood.

The days are past when Queen Mary greeted the toddling girl as "bambina," and when her uncle Edward, jocosely met her with a casual "Hello Queen Elizabeth!" Was there prophesy in his care- and the British Empire.

The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

A CHILD ON CHRISTMAS

This holiest of all the nights, I wonder what it means, 'Tis surely more than candle lights On tinsel evergreens. It's more than toys that make it dear. And eating pleasant things; For, if you'll listen right, you'll hear A murmuring of wings. My Grandma says it's more than fun And hanging up your stockings; It's known every needy one

IT'S HELPING THOSE WHO FEEL THE ROD OF GRIEF AND HEAVY LABORS.

Perhaps it's being nice to God By loving all your neighbors.

A BAD MEMORY IS THE SKELETON IN THE LAR'S CLOSET.

Normal people are the ones who are considered queer. Many a girl is so dreadful, she'll even poison her heart. "Forget your worries," says the doctor—and then he sends h's bill. It is not the last worker who wins; it's the fellow who sticks to it. The water shark bites a man's leg off, but the land shark merely pulls it.

THE LAZIEST MAN IN THE WORLD IS THE ONE WHO GOES TO WORK AND IS TOO LAZY TO STOP.

If the office man to start out to search for the man it would soon get lost in the crowd. He learns much who studies the acts of other men, but he learns more who studies his own acts. Nothing increases the value of real estate more than the rumor that an oil company is looking for a site for a filling station.
