Soviet Public Prepared For "Emergency"

land. For the first time newspapers published maps showing the location of the fighting.

Publish Treaty Maps

Both Pravda, Communist party newspaper, and Izvestia, Government organ, carried photostatic copies of the Russian-Chinese treaty maps of June 26, 1938, showing the disputed Changkufeng heights as a part of Russian territory.

The army newspaper "Red Star" carried this banner headline: "We are keeping our dynamite dry."

The Government calls us we will race to the frontier and exterminate the Fascist aggressors."

A mass meeting of miners and metal workers resolved that "let the Fascist dogs remember the glorious Red Army is ready any minute to destroy any enemy."

An indication the Russians were not forgetting Germans in their preoccupation with the Far East was seen in a resolution of workers of the southwestern Russian Kiev district which was prominently displayed in Izvestia.

"We know very well that Japanese imperialists are hand in glove with German Fascists who dream of occupying the Ukraine," the resolution said in reference to German designs on the rich southwestern district.

"But they can only dream of it. The Ukrainian people as well as other peoples of our country will defend their land from west to east in all corners of the Soviet Union."

Vladivostok Threatened?

The engagement for possession of the Changkufeng heights, which dominate Russia's Posselt Bay, was beginning to lead some foreign military observers to consider the possibility of Japan preparing a drive against Vladivostok, Russia's nearby Pacific naval base.

The fighting, it was said, might be only a prelude to an ambitious attempt to occupy the Ukraine, off Moscow from across to the Pacific. It was pointed out that Japanese tactics at Changkufeng were similar to those employed at Port Arthur during the Russian-Japanese war and at Tsingtao during the Great War.

In the campaign against Port Arthur, then leased from China by Russia and now a part of Japanese Kwangtung leased territory, Japanese attacked from the land side, first taking strategic heights from which they bombarded Port Arthur's forts. Russia surrendered the city, which commands naval approaches to the North China Province of Hopeh, Jan. 2, 1905.

CHOLERA PLAGUE IN India Subsiding

NEW DELHI, Aug. 3 — (CP) — India's cholera plague, taking thousands of victims a week, has brought a reformation of ideas concerning this country's health services.

As the epidemic subsides and incidence of the disease tends to become no more than normal, provincial governments, and that of the United Provinces in particular, are showing their conviction of the urgency of complete government control of health services coupled with decentralization of administration.

In other words the provinces, led by the United Provinces which received the plague's hardest blow, realize they must make the Indian villager responsible for elementary health services under control and direction of the provincial health ministry.

Indians Guard New Sanctuary

QUEBEC, Aug. 3 — (CP) — In a remote far northern Quebec district, once the home of countless numbers of beaver, the Quebec government plans to re-establish the industrial animals and assure protection of the homes it is hoped they will build.

The government's plan, under the direction of Hon. Onesime Gagnon, game and fisheries minister, is for a beaver sanctuary of an area of 1,000 square miles, southeast of James Bay. The idea of a sanctuary first was suggested by the late Count Henry de Puylajan, eminent naturalist and writer who gave up the civilization of a half-century ago to live in the Quebec woods.

One of the first problems was a lack of beavers in the proposed sanctuary area where they once were prolific. But negotiations with the Federal Department of Indian Affairs resulted in an agreement whereby the federal department would hire Indians to trap the beaver alive and transport them to the sanctuary whose boundaries will be the Rupert River, which flows into James Bay, the Ontario-Quebec line down to the Harricana River, and on the east, Lake Evans, Lake Kanoniska, Lake Beatrice and Lake Matagami.

Once the sanctuary is well stocked with the flat-tailed dam-builders, Indians will be given charge of the re-established animal population. And Indians too will see to observation of a hunting ban to blanket the area. None of the beavers will be killed until a census shows that the sanctuary has at least 2,000 thriving beaver families. Then, the Indian keepers who will be encouraged to set up homes of their own in the sanctuary will be given permission to go beaver hunting once in a while.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3 — Final returns from Tuesday's Democratic primaries in Kansas, Missouri, Virginia and West Virginia disclose little cause for cheering by President Roosevelt's followers, despite some balancing factors.

There is enough anti-New Deal tide in some of the returns to raise increasing doubts over the outcome of the crucial senatorial contest next Saturday in Kentucky, where Mr. Roosevelt has invited a straight-cut test of his party leadership by personal intervention in the Barkley-Chandler primary race.

To politicians, the most important portent of the four-state voting is the emergence from the Missouri primaries of Senator Bennett Champ Clark as a probable formidable contender for presidential nomination in 1940. The fact that his re-nomination victory was expected, does not lessen its significance.

Unless he is defeated for reelection, observers here expect Clark to be frequently mentioned as a logical rallying point for anti-Roosevelt sentiment in the 1940 Democratic convention.

The outcome of the contested Democratic primaries for House nominations in Virginia adds its own weight to the balance. In both cases Virginia voters appear to have endorsed the independent stand taken against many Roosevelt measures by the two Democratic senators from Virginia, Carter Glass
