Gypsies Dance Together To Sad Strains of Violins

(United Press) DRAGALEVTSI, Bulgaria, Oct. 2.—The old monastery in this village on the slope of Mount Vitosha, near Sofia, was the gathering place the other day of many thousands of gypsies. They arrived on horseback on donkeyback or on foot. During the night their bivouac fires twinkled all over the mountain side. From many towns and villages in the Sofia district they arrived to celebrate the fete day of St. Mary the Virgin, which the gypsies observe more ardently than the Christians, despite the fact that the day marks an event in a religion they do not profess.

By nightfall the enclosure of the old monastery began to fill with men and women of dark complexion and great vivacity. The women were picturesque in their baggy trousers of bright-colored calico. Having cooked their stews, they seated themselves around the steaming pots, each person dipping up the food with a wooden spoon. Many a horse deal, it is suspected, was closed while traders broke the black loaves of bread together. The feasting and talking went on all night, till the dawn began to be blotted out and the dawn appeared over the Sofia plain.

It was then that the main event of the gathering took place. The gypsies started the dance as the sun was peeping over the distant mountains, men and women holding hands and dancing in long lines while the violins worked industriously in minor keys.

The closing ceremony had to do with bread. The patriarch of the tribe held a black loaf before him and asked the men, "Can you see me?" "The loaf is so large we can hardly see you," was the reply in unison from men and women. "Here's hoping that next year the loaf will be so large that you will not be able to see me at all," was the patriarch's benediction.

Tragic End Of Newly Weds (Canadian Press) LONDON, Oct. 1.—How a bride sang to her dying husband when he was hanging over an Alpine precipice is revealed in a Central News despatch from Geneva: Frau Hettler and her husband, who were married three weeks ago in Budapest, were spending their honeymoon in attempting to scale some difficult peaks in the Otztal Alps. Roped together, they reached the top, but on descending the husband fell over the precipice. The bride did not have strength enough to pull her husband to the top. She talked to him and he answered her, but as night came on the answers ceased. She continued to talk, however, and even sang for a while to keep his courage up. The next morning the man and woman were found, the bride unconscious and the husband dead.

Montreal Sculptor To Design Statue (Canadian Press) OTTAWA, Oct. 2.—The sub-committee of the Cabinet which, with the assistance of experts, have been passing judgment upon fifty designs submitted for the Statue of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, have accepted that of Emile Brunet, of Montreal. He is a young sculptor, who has been studying abroad and who made some of the ornamental designs of Parliament buildings. The statue is to be in bronze and life size and will be on an imposing base with steps leading up to the pedestal. The model is very life like. It will probably be cast and completed by next summer, and the unveiling will be the occasion of a ceremony fitting the distinguished statesman who is commemorated. MANHOOD No man loses his manhood in the discharge of duty. His character shines out all the clearer and worthier in facing the stern issues of life.
