THE BAPTIST CHURCH

At the morning service of worship the Rev. Ronald Noble took as the subject of his sermon "Lest We Forget." An eloquent tribute was paid to the men of Canada who in the last war gave their lives for freedom, for peace, for a better world. They won the war for us but too little have we done toward building the better world of their hopes and ours. There has been indifference, greed, abuse of freedom. In self satisfaction we have been blind to threats of danger and once more men must die that freedom may live. We must lose ourselves in the will of God, that the peace won by that victory whose promise is brightening before us shall not be in vain. Thiman's "Earth Does Not Hold" was the anthem. Mr. Ivan Robertson sang impressively "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

The Church School met for Bible Study session at 2.30 p.m.

The service of evening worship was observed at 7 p.m., with sermon by Mr. Noble "The Everlasting Mercy." Oley Speaks' "More Love to Thee O Christ" was the evening anthem. Mr. Stirling Inman sang with fine expression, "I Come to Thee" (Roma). The Communion of the Lord's Supper was observed at the close of the evening worship.

Bootlegging On Alaska Highway

EDMONTON, Nov. 5 — (CP) — Royal Canadian Mounted Police announced here today that six men, three from Winnipeg and three from Edmonton, had been arrested for selling illicit liquor in Edmonton and at points along the Alaska Highway.

Police said the Edmonton men arrested and now free on $1,000 bail are Fred Alexander Sawchuk, John Sawchuk and Albert J. Moss. Men arrested at Winnipeg and now en route to Edmonton they said are James Van Elkin, Joe Burkowski and Joe Wyrozub.

R.C.M.P. said some of the liquor went to the "arid north" where it sold at prices "ranging as low as $10 a bottle to something away up there."

All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keyes

"Well, didn't she tell you the same thing she told me? That she'd come back because she wanted to be with you?"

"Yes, she did try to tell me the same things she'd told you, but I wouldn't let her. I was too busy saying things to her. Things she'll never forgive. Do you mind if we don't talk about this any more just now? I've had a sort of knockout blow myself and I've still got quite a lot to do tonight—have you some way of getting home all right?"

Helen picked up her sable muff and smoothed it. "Oh, yes! Giles is going to take me home. He said he'd just drive around the block till I came out. I'm sorry Giles is quite so old," she said reflectively. "When we first came to Washington, when it was possible to think of him as fortyish, it wasn't so bad. But there's an awful difference between being fortyish and fiftyish, isn't there? If I didn't think so I believe I'd consider Giles very seriously. He's awfully eligible, except for his age. You know Zoe forgot all about him years ago. And here I am, completely unattached and everything—"

"Giles Arnold wants to marry you!"

"Why, yes! I don't see what you think there is so strange about it, except that Giles is old enough to be my father. I don't think it's fair to keep him waiting any longer. I mean, waiting to drive me home. Good night. I hope you'll feel lots better in the morning."

The outer office was dusky and deserted. But in the office beyond, a light was still burning brightly. Helen decided to have a word with Bert Scruggs before she left. She tapped on the door and opened it.

Bert had gone. But Beverley Corbin was still there, standing in front of a small mirror and carefully applying make-up to her pretty piquant face. "Why, hello, Mrs. Terraza!" she said. "Have you and Bob got through talking at last? This is the second time within a week that he's been late to a dinner date with me."

CHAPTER XXVI

Beverley screwed her lipstick back into place, and tilted her pointed hat to an angle better calculated to set off the effect of the long red feather. She thought it was just right when Bob came into the room. "Sorry to have kept you waiting," he said. "My sister's been in my office. That's what delayed me."

"Yes. She came in here too. I think she expected to find Bert, and that she was rather surprised to find me instead. I'd feel badly to have her suspicious of me. She's so unspoiled. I can't imagine her being connected with anything that's sordid."

"Do you feel what we've done is sordid, Beverley?"

"I didn't at first. But I got the idea that when Zoe came home this last time, she wanted very much to stay. That she hoped, somehow, you and she could find some kind of a common meeting ground and get together again."

"You're not mistaken. She came back, but I wouldn't let her stay. I sent her away. It isn't generally known yet, but it will be in a day or two. She's gone back to Europe—'for an indefinite period in undetermined territory'." The sentence trailed away, formlessly. Bob stood loking away from Beverley, at nothing in particular.

"You didn't send her away because of me, did you, Bob? It's Zoe you really care for, I've always known that."

"No, I didn't send her away because of you. I sent her away because I'd been told she came here to be with Captain Arnold, and I believed it. I don't know whether you ever heard—he wanted very much to marry her once, and it was nip and tuck which one of us she would take. She decided in favor of me because she thought he had let her down. I told her that if she didn't leave Washington within twenty-four hours I'd sue her for divorce and name him as correspondent. Do you remember another night, the first of the week, that I was late when I'd asked you to go out to dinner with me? Well, the reason I was late was because I was up in Zoe's room telling her to clear out before I dragged her name in the dust and ruined the career of a man who'd never done me the slightest harm, and who, as it turns out, now wants to marry my sister."

Beverley had not said a word. But the incredulity which he had seen, an hour before, in Helen's face, was nothing compared with the incredulity that he saw in Beverley's now.

"Please don't look at me like that, Beverley. I can't bear it. You're all I have left. I'd be very glad to marry you, if you'd let me. Zoe'll stay away until after Giles has come up for selection, and then she'll divorce me for cruel and abusive treatment. After she's done that you and I can be married."

"Oh, Bob, will you stop!" Her words came crisply, with no indication of yielding or even of compromise. "Where is Zoe, Bob?"

"I don't know. We know she did sail, because Helen had a radiogram. But that didn't give us any sort of a clue."

"Never mind. You'll have to start out after her. Forget about the bureau. I'll stay here and help Bert run it. We'll keep it going. Forget about me. I'll manage. I've had an offer of a job in Cincinnati, a good one. I'm going to take it. But not now. Not until — I know it'll be kept open for me, Bob. If you don't go after Zoe, I'll resign right away. I don't suppose it'll do any good to ask her to come home with you, but at least you can tell her that it would mean more than anything else in the world to you if she would. Then if she sends you away, you can't help it. I think probably she will. But after you've gone, she'll think of you differently than she has in a long time. And by and by, perhaps something will happen that will bring her back to you after all."

When Bob reached Hunter's Green on Sunday and went first to the little transformed schoolhouse which was now Helen's headquarters, he found this apparently deserted. Having knocked several times without getting any answer, he went on to the big house, where Pearl Gray opened the door for him with the air of one who has been lying in wait for an expected arrival.

"Good mornin', Mr. Bob. A' sho'ly is glad to see you. Let me rest your wraps. Didn't Miss Zoe come with you?"

RAINBOW

The rain bow has always been of good cheer to farmers because when there is a rainbow, there has been rain for the crops. Another good friend of farmers is H. & N.'s "BLACK TWIST" CHEWING because its stimulating, friendly flavor and lasting goodness help to smooth the furrows of care.

ST. PETERS CATHEDRAL

At the 11 o'clock service yesterday a presentation and address was made to F.O. B S. Browne, R.A.F. on the eve of his departure from the Island. Since his arrival in the City F.O. Browne was a regular attendant at St. Peters and read the Scripture lessons at evensong. The presentation was a slight token of appreciation that the congregation felt for his services and regular attandance, and the address voiced the best wishes of the congregation to the recipient, coupled with the wish that some at least of the congregation would meet him either here or in another country. Mr. Browne made a suitable reply during which he spoke of his happy experiences at St. Peters and the privilege which was his in being able to take part in the services. Beginning this week in order to save coal the daily services will be said in the temporary chapel set up in the parish hall.

Milk Is Reported Scarce In Saint John

SAINT JOHN, N.B., Nov. 5 — (CP) — Scarcity of feed for cows and increased consumption has created a serious milk situation here dairymen stated today. Most dealers said they were "barely getting by" and one has been forced to skip some deliveries to households. Scarcity of feed for hogs also was reported.

FREDERICTON, Nov. 4 — (CP) — Judging started today at the seventh live fox show of the New Brunswick Fur Farmers' Association. Almost 500 entries were on display from many parts of the province.

Faces in the Case at Nassau

Nancy Oakes de Marigny and investigator Raymond Schindler.

Defense Counsels Godfrey Higgs and W. E. A. Callender.

Charles O'Malley, New York detective, and Frank Conway, fingerprint expert from New York.

Betty Roberts and Maltese cat

Capt. Maurice B. O'Neil

Here are some of the key characters in the Nassau courtroom drama as the defense prepares to state its case in the Sir Harry Oakes murder trial. Nancy Oakes de Marigny, daughter of the murder victim and wife of the accused brought U. S. special investigator Raymond Schindler to the Bahamas to aid the case of her husband, Count Alfred de Marigny. Young attorneys Higgs and Callender are handling the defense in a skillful manner. Called in from New York to testify on documents and fingerprints in the case were detectives O'Malley and Conway. Betty Roberts, girl friend of de Marigny's roommate, holds the Maltese cat that plays the role of "silent witness." Captain O'Neil of New Orleans bureau of identification is a defense witness.
