Conscription Question Looms Before Commons

By C.R. BLACKBURN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA, Jan. 12—(CP)—With National government and unlimited conscription the chief planks in the platform of Conservative Leader Meighen, there is no doubt these will be important issues in parliament after the new session opens a week from next Thursday.

While there is reason to believe some action may be taken to enlarge the compulsory service laws, possibly with the approval of powerful Quebec circles, there appears little likelihood that the national government proposal will meet with any encouragement in government ranks.

Mr. Meighen's advocacy of conscription in his by-election campaign keynote speech last Friday night was only one of the indications of a demand for it. Conservative circles here state that their party caucuses last session never definitely endorsed conscription for overseas service but they expect that when the members return to the new session they will caucus and rally behind the new leader's party platform.

At least three rank and file members of Prime Minister Mackenzie King's party in the House of Commons have come out for conscription of manpower for service outside Canada—W. Ross Macdonald of Brantford, Ralph Maybank of Winnipeg South Centre and Fred Hoblitzell of Toronto-Eglington.

Keeping Own Counsel

Mr. King, busy in his office at Laurier House and attending frequent cabinet meetings in the east block, is keeping his own counsel on the conscription problem.

There were intimations from official sources tonight that he would reserve any statement he might make until Parliament is in session.

Proceedings in cabinet council are necessarily secret and members are under oath not to reveal what goes on about the giant circular table in the Privy Council room of the east block.

However, there have been persistent reports that several ministers have to be urging upon the Prime Minister that the drastically changed circumstances of the war in recent weeks now justify his recalling the pledge he made in 1939 and 1940 not to introduce conscription for service overseas.

The Prime Minister recently declared he would not depart from his pledge against conscription before consulting the people.

Rumored Referendum

In the face of growing demand for enlarged compulsory service particularly since the United States entered the war, it has been reported from good sources that a referendum is under consideration.

But this method has been condemned editorially and by Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario in a public statement, as a dangerous procedure if national unity is to be safeguarded.

Observers here recall that in January, 1940, in the face of criticism from Ontario and other sources that the war effort was not all it should be, Mr. King had Parliament dissolved dramatically the same day the session opened, and brought on a general election.

Three Alternatives

Members of the government have already intimated that selective compulsory service within Canada will be greatly extended to provide manpower not only for the armed forces but industry and agriculture as well. If the government decides that the present situation requires it to go further and provide for compulsory service in the armed forces overseas three courses would be open to it:—

1. The people could be asked, in a referendum, whether or not they desire extension of the National Resources Mobilization Act—which provides for compulsory service at home—to cover service anywhere in the field of war.

2. The government could go to the country on an "all out" war effort policy involving unlimited conscription.

3. The government could propose the necessary amendments to the National Resources Mobilization Act to effect general conscription without limit and let the elected members of Parliament to settle this question for the people.

Meanwhile men within the military age limit among close to 500,000 Canadians in the United States are subject to conscription in that country for service in any war arena, unless they return to Canada.

Other matters occupying the government during this pre-sessional period include preparation of the agreements with the provinces under which they will abandon the income tax field for the duration of the war and accept compensation from the federal treasury.

These agreements are expected to be completed this week and to be made public by the finance minister at the same time they are submitted to the provincial governments.

ALEXANDRA SCHOOL CONCERT

On Tuesday evening, December 23rd, the annual Christmas concert of Alexandra was held in the schoolroom.

The school was suitably decorated for the occasion with red and green streamers, spruce, tinsel and flags. A prettily decorated and well laden tree stood in the corner.

Nazi Leaders Deny reports of Incipient revolt

SOMEWHERE ON THE GERMAN FRONTIER, Jan. 12—(AP)—The Nazi leadership has taken extraordinary measures to deny reports of incipient revolution within Germany, advices to this border point disclosed.

These measures—including the awakening of foreign correspondents in the middle of the night to inform them of the rumors and the foreign office denials—came at a time when Hitler's own press chief and all the German newspapers were admitting the gravity of the military situation in Russia.

The admissions, coupled with appeals for a renewal of faith in Hitler, showed that the winter campaign in Russia is written off by the German leaders as lost.

Launch Recruiting Drive

In every available quarter, meanwhile, the German army launched a recruiting drive in the hope of building a fresh force for the planned spring offensive. Highly reliable advices said that because of German losses and the need for a far greater army in any new push, this drive had spread into Bulgaria, the occupied Baltic states and even into Norway. The recruiting campaign perhaps prompted the German paper in Norway, Deutsche Zeitung in Norwegen, to attack Sweden for not aiding Finland and for banning exportation of clothing which Germans in Sweden wanted to send to the Russian front.

As far as the internal German situation goes, it is known here that the first great German failures in the east inspired feelings of concern and unrest at home. However, the foreign correspondents who were called from their beds to hear telephoned denials of reports of an imminent state of revolution said it was quite apparent that there was no evidence of such a thing in Berlin, and the best information obtainable elsewhere is that no organized effort to revolt exists or is likely to exist soon.

Correspondents Surprised

Yet, the correspondents expressed surprise that the drastic form of denial was deemed necessary in the Wilhelmstrasse.

In making its denials, the foreign office blamed the reports on British and United States sources. Saturday the Berlin radio quoting the Berlin correspondent for the Rumanian newspaper Timpul, said that "rumors of growing dissatisfaction in Germany...were launched in the hope of influencing the forthcoming conference (of Pan-American foreign ministers) at Rio De Janeiro." The broadcast said the rumors had it that machine guns were mounted on the roofs of Berlin hotels, adding that Rumanian journalists in Germany could themselves see that this was not true.

Germany's fountain-heads of propaganda appeared to be trying to convince Germans that they were talking frankly about what is going on in Russia.

Dr. Otto Dietrich, Hitler's press chief, told newspaper readers in a universally-published article that German military operations "have entered an extremely serious and indeed critical phase." He asked the people to remember that Hitler had led them to victory in the past and urged them to believe that he would do so again.

"Der Fuehrer will know how to overcome this crisis," said Dietrich.

(It was Dietrich who, last Oct. 9, announced that Soviet Russia was militarily finished as the result of Hitler's "last great decisive" battle of 1941 at Bryansk and Vyasma, a line threatened now by the Russian counter-offensive.)

Eshcing Dietrich, the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung said the toughness of the Russian enemy and the Russian winter "necessitate the last grain of physical and moral courage from our soldiers."

Increasing information from reliable sources tells the story behind all this.

Nazi Army Troubles

It is that the Nazi army troubles began when Hitler impatiently overruled his then commander in chief, Field Marshal Walther Von Brauchitsch, who presented a plan for withdrawal to the Berezina River, nearly 400 miles west of Moscow, before the real winter set in.

Hitler insisted on pressing ahead. Von Brauchitsch resigned and other officers declined to take the responsibility for a winter struggle on the icy Moscow approaches. Hitler himself took over the army command.

But by that time it was too late. Winter set in in full fury before the construction of barracks was begun in mid-December. The continued Russian offensive forced abandonment of a number of "winter quarters" which, Berlin dispatches have admitted, were modelled after Russian peasant huts.

Subsequently, the German bases were moved much farther back than had been planned. Riga dispatches have told of the commandeering of all available houses, buildings and rooms for the German military, despite the presence of typhus in that Latvian area.

A German agency dispatch saw fit to deny Saturday that Germany is building a defence line on the Oder River—well within Germany, paralleling the old Polish border.

Disrupt Plans for Turkey

Perhaps equal in importance to the German retreat in Russia were indications that Nazi plans for political or even military pressure on Turkey have been seriously delayed if not completely disrupted. One traveller leaving Germany for northern Europe said plans had been made to press the Turks into the axis fold this month. The Russian counter-invasion of the Crimea delayed this and now any major overtures to Turkey must wait.

Observers took note that Dietrich's article, entitled "the battle for the future and the fate of Germany," not only sought to assure the people that Hitler would lead them in an effort to thrust aside the Russian difficulties but took cognizance of criticism concerning German armament, saying that "whatever may have been regarded as excessive" had in the past proved the cornerstone of German victory.

These four Pilots are among the first Canadians from the Empire Air Training Scheme to arrive in the Middle East for services with the Royal Air Force. Already they have proved themselves as Heroes of the Clouds. The first on the left is R. H. Hunter, son of Mrs. Russell Hunter of Dundas, P.E.I.; next to him is George Keefer of Charlottetown, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Keefer and nephew of Mrs. Gordon Hughes. Hunter is a brother of Norman Hunter now employed with the Rogers Hardware.

Meanwhile, German newspapers made no mention of the important towns which have been recaptured by the Red armies.

From the soldiers themselves came this typical note, contained in a letter home from a German anti aircraft battery commander:—"All our conversations and thoughts here on the eastern front are centred about one and the same subject: home leave. ...Things were different last year....it is better not to have any illusions about home leave....thus nobody will be disappointed."

CHUNGKING, Jan. 12 — (AP) — An escaped Briton said today that when Hong Kong finally surrendered Christmas Day the Japanese had penetrated to the heart of the city and were within a few hundred yards of battle headquarters itself—a vast bombproof, shell-proof dugout housing the nerve centre of the defences.

The Japanese attacked the British line for days and suffered heavy losses from point-blank machine-gun fire of British tommies below the hill overlooking the happy valley race course. The stout defence was unable to hold the final charge of overwhelming fresh Japanese forces.

The British, Canadian and Indian garrison of some 10,000 suffered extremely heavy losses, especially among officers upon whom Japanese snipers seemed to concentrate. Hong Kong's "air force" of six old planes was put out of action the first day and the invaders dive bombers afterwards wrecked havoc unopposed.

In the final hour of surrender, flames and smoke shot skyward as the defenders blew up ammunition dumps. The Japanese had their victory but it cost them sorely in lives and badly needed ammunition.

Along toward the end the electric and water systems were knocked out on the island, forcing the defenders to rely upon candles and oil lamps for light, ponds and wells of brackish water to quench their thirst.
