John Gresham's Girl

By Concordia Merrel

(Continued) During the next few weeks he found himself exonerated formally in the eyes of all the world, of any guilt in connection with the crime for which he had suffered. Macklin was being dealt with by the law, and things were not looking too rosy for him. Sir John, terribly upset, and not fully understanding quite all there was in the situation between Lucy and her husband, made very sincere offers of reconciliation, but Jim's madness for revenge swept him on, and he would only fight Gresham's tooth and nail. Things began to look bad for the old firm. Ames doggedly stuck to his post and did his best, but he was up against a competition that was wholly unparing of consequences. So that he ruined Gresham's. Jim did not mind if he ruined himself in the process.

"And hang it all," Ames said more than once, getting nervous, and feeling utterly at a loss as to how to counter the attack. "He must be losing hand over fist. If I were to engage to build a boat for nothing he'd engage to build two on the same terms. . . . He can't go on for ever. . . ."

INSTALLMENT 42

"No," Sir John would answer him and neither can we. Oliver, which was only too true. "The biggest business in the world couldn't stand against competition of this sort," Ames declared.

Sir John was game enough, but his illness had pulled him down badly, and weeks of anxiety were visibly beginning to tell on him. He was beginning to look old, harassed, and there was a new touch of feebleness about him, that tore at Lucy's heart. She was pretty nearly distracted as one business disaster after another was reported to her. She did not know what to do and the only thing she could think of, shamed her through and through. . . . But, driven to desperation she finally did it. She went on evenings, after dinner, to the flat and as she had expected, found Jim at home. She still had her key, and let herself in and was standing in the drawing-room doorway, looking at him, before he had had time to realize that she was there. He rose rather quickly at sight of her and stood challenging her with his dark burning eyes. She closed the door, and without coming further into the room, said quietly:

"Jim, if I give you the love you once asked for, will you stop your fight against Gresham's?" It cost a word of pluck and resolution to say that, and the color came richly into her face as she spoke. But he looked at her steadily, and all he said was:

"So Gresham's are beginning to go under?"

"No firm could stand the attack you are making against it, Jim," she answered.

"Why do you come to me about it? I warned you of what I meant to do."

"I know, and I did what I could to . . . persuade you. . . ." She broke off and paused a moment. Then: "It's my father, Jim. He has been ill. This is . . . breaking him up. . . ." Her voice shook.

"What is that to me?" he asked harshly.

She hesitated slightly, then said: "You once offered to . . . give your revenge for . . . for . . ."

"Your love?" he broke in with short breath. "But you flung that back into my face, if you remember. . . . Why should you think that I would be willing to . . .?" She interrupted him:

"I have only myself to offer, Jim. He stood for a little while still and silent. Then, the words coming very slowly: "If it were not for your father. . . ."

The color flashed up into her cheeks again.

"I'd die sooner than say what I have said this evening. . . ."

He colored at that, too, and his eyes seemed to go very distant.

"You are too late," he said, some emotion shaking his voice in spite of his efforts to control it. "I wanted your love once. But the bargain no longer has any attraction for me. . . . I warned you of this," he broke out, with sudden fire, "I told you when you turned me down as if I were something that was leathery to you. . . . That whatever came after, you would be responsible for it. . . . Well, it's come and you are shirking. . . . But you can't turn me down and pick me up again, just whenever it suits you. I asked for your love once and you refused me. . . . Now I don't want it. . . . You have come to me too late. . . . You have come, drawing a breath, and she saw that he was shirking slightly. She turned away.

"I understand, Jim," she said,

IN MEMORIAM

MR. FREDERICK J. COLES

Mr. Frederick J. Coles passed away at his home in Milton on Feb. 15th, after a prolonged illness. He was 72 years of age. The funeral was held at his late residence on Wednesday, Feb. 17th, and in the presence of the Rev. Ewen MacDougall on account of illness, the Rev. L. J. Leard of Winsloe conducted the service.

The following selections were sung: "O God of Bethel," "The Lord is My Shepherd" and "Take comfort Christians, when your friends in Jesus fall asleep." The Rev. Mr. Leard spoke from the words of II Timothy 4: 7. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

The funeral was one of the largest held in the community for a long time, friends coming from near and far to pay their respects to the memory of an old friend and neighbor.

The pall bearers were: A. E. Dollar, William Parrish, Nelson Kent, A. W. Stewart, Charles Proude and Hammond Hooper.

There are left to mourn his death, his wife, three sons and six daughters. The sons are Reigh, John and Fred. The daughters are Mary, Mrs. Alex McLean, Sadie, Mrs. Arch McLeod, Annie, Catherine, Susie, Mrs. James Morrow and Ruth, Mrs. George Stewart.

After the regular church service at the grave which was read by Rev. Mr. Leard, the concluding service was in charge of the members of Barton Lodge L. O. L. of which Mr. Coles was a member.

Mr. Coles was for many years a Scotland and took an active interest in its work.

He will be greatly missed in the old home and in the community where he had spent most of his life.

Sincere sympathy is extended to Mrs. Coles and family in their sorrow. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

EAST WILTSHIRE SCHOOL

The little gray school house that stood in the vale, Where class mates we met fifty years ago. In memory we visit the dear old play ground, And greet the loved ones, who us never did fall.

So many have scattered the wide world afar, Three have gone the good word of Life to proclaim, One is a doctor, his native land is his field, Yes, Tom was a good sport we all would affirm.

How well we recall, in the spring-time of Life, We gathered trailing Arbutus that grew in the vale, Our teacher would, join in the games that we played, We were happy and gay and our spirits were light.

One place in my memory, that never shall fail, Tho' my footsteps may journey many miles far away, The place that holds fond recollections of Childhood

Is the little gray school house that stood in the vale, —Minnie M. Murray, Hemiker, New Hampshire.

Mrs. Ross Boulter has returned home after spending a very pleasant week-end in Charlottetown with her son Samuel, who was attending Prince of Wales College until the fire but now in Prince Street School.

The Baptist Young People of Tron had a Valentine Social on Friday night which proved a great success. Last but not least was the lovely lunch served by the ladies. Special mention should be made of Mrs. J. Thomas, who kindly supplied the tea and cream.

Old Jack Frost has been with us for the last few days, gently telling us that all Spring signs fade away when he appears. Anyway we cannot complain. Cars have run between Victoria and Charlottetown and Victoria and Summerside every month this winter so far.

Cloak And Dressmakers On Protest Strike

(Press) BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 25.—United cloak and dressmakers, variously estimated in number at 1,500 to 3,500 went on strike today in protest against the alleged refusal of manufacturers to meet workers to negotiate new working agreements at the expiration of the last contracts, February 15.

The strike, which had the approval of the American Federation of Labor as well as the Boston Central Labor Union and the Massachusetts Federation of Labor, was called by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Half of the union shops in the city were said to be affected. The walkout was one of the few general strikes in the garment industry in 15 years.

The Children's Coughs Worry The Mother

Mrs. C. W. Harper, Silver Water, Ont., writes: "I was very much worried over the nasty cough my two children had, and I had tried several remedies to no effect. One day my husband was in the drug store and overheard a lady and the druggist discussing remedies, and she seemed very thankful to Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for relieving her children, so he came home with a bottle and in two days both the children were well." Price 35c a bottle; large family size 65c; at all drug and general stores; put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.
