

The Figure Men Admire

Slim and Active through a Daily Dose of Kruschen Salts

It is often said that fat girls must take the "leavings" when it comes to choosing sweethearts. That may be an exaggeration; but certain it is that most men, in this year of "grace" 1935, do prefer a slender, winsome girl. After all, can you blame them?

Fortunately, there is a simple and a safe recipe which assists towards that much-desired slim and attractive figure. The recipe is—Every morning take one half-teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Kruschen is a blend of various mineral salts which help the internal organs to function properly, and to throw off regularly harmful poisons and waste matter. Kruschen actually builds up health and energy—it makes you more active—and with the increased activity there comes a wonderful improvement in your figure.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. a bottle.

Tom Sawyer

By MARK TWAIN (Samuel L. Clemens)

The village was stirred in vacation time by the murder trial. Muff Potter faced the jury with his life in the balance, for his knife had been found beside the body of Dr. Robinson and Injun Joe's testimony had practically assured his conviction. The spectators were perplexed by the refusal of Potter's counsel to cross-examine the state's witnesses. Finally, the prosecutor said: "We have fastened this awful crime, beyond possibility of question, upon the unhappy prisoner at the bar. We rest our case here."

A groan escaped from poor Potter as he put his face in his hands and rocked to and fro.

The defense counsel arose. "Your honor," he said, "at first we intended to prove that our client did this fearful deed in the delirium of drink. We have changed our mind. We shall not offer that plea." Then to the clerk: "Call Thomas Sawyer."

A puzzled amazement awoke in every face in the house. Tom looked wild enough, for he was badly scared. The oath was administered. "Where were you on the seventeenth of June midnight?" he was asked.

Tom glanced at Injun Joe's face and his tongue failed him for a moment, but he managed to answer: "In the graveyard."

"Speak louder," said the counsel. "Were you near Hoss Williams's grave?"

"Yes."

"Hidden?"

"Yes, behind some elms."

Injun Joe gave a barely perceptible start. "Now tell what occurred," said Potter's lawyer.

Tom began—hesitatingly at first, but warmed up to his subject as the audience sat rapt in the ghostly fascination of his tale. The strain upon poor Tom's face reached its climax when the boy said: "I was with the doctor fetched the board around and Muff Potter fell, Injun Joe jumped with the knife and

Don't take Chances

"Dangerous!" the "dumb" man answered. "Milkop!"

His voice made the boys quake. It was Injun Joe's!

"You go to the river," he went on, "and I'll do the 'dangerous' job. Then wait till you hear from me, and we'll leg it together for Texas."

"What'll we do with the little swag we got left?" said the other.

"Six hundred and fifty in silver's something to be proud of," said Tom.

He lifted a hearthstone and pulled out a bag that jingled pleasantly. The men took out a few coins and decided to bury the rest under the floor of the house. Joe started digging with his bowie knife when suddenly the blade hit upon something. He dug a little more and discovered a box in the top of which he cut a hole.

He put in his hand and drew it out—

"Man, it's money!"

"The two men examined the coins. They were rose up, weak but excited as the men below.

Joe's comrade saw the boys' pick and shovel in the corner and soon the men had the box out of the hole. There were thousands of dollars in it.

"Now, you won't need to do that job," said Joe's partner.

"You don't know me," replied Joe. "Tain't robbery altogether—it's revenge!"

Suddenly Joe wondered who had brought the pick and shovel here, and fearing the blade might also have been used to dig up the treasure, he decided to take away the treasure.

"We'll hide it in my den," Joe said, "under the cross."

"The two slipped out of the house, bearing the heavy box.

The boys rose up, weak but relieved, though Tom had the ghostly thought that the half-breed's "revenge" might apply to him.

THE COOK'S CORNER

Shrimp Pancakes—Toss the shrimp in little butter, and bind them with some thick cream or white sauce made with milk and fish stock. Season with pepper and salt, and add a drop or two of onion juice, or a few chopped chives. Make your pancakes, season them with this mixture, sprinkle them with a little cream and grated cheese, and brown this very quickly.

Meat Pancakes—An excellent way of using up some cold meat. Cut it up small, and bind it with a well-flavored sauce, adding if you like chopped mushroom, onion, tomato. Make some pancakes, keeping them flat and arrange them in a pile on a dish with a layer of the meat stuffing between them. Four round, or over, some brown sauce, and serve very hot indeed.

Vegetable Pancakes—Make more savory pancakes by adding to the batter some finely chopped parsley, chives and chervil. As each is cooked, spread it with a macedoine of vegetables (this will have to be tinged just now) and roll up. Arrange these on a long dish, and serve them hot.

Orange Pancakes—Add a little orange flower water to the batter before you make the pancakes, and when they are cooked and folded, garnish them with some warmed sections of orange previously soaked in a little Curacao.

Lentil Tripe—Make a batter with 1/2 cup flour, two eggs and half a pint of milk, season with salt to taste and cook your pancakes. As soon as they are done, roll them up, and cut them across in thin strips, piling these up in a dish. Pour over a thick white sauce, sprinkle them with grated cheese and brown in the oven. If you like to make it more oniony, add some very finely chopped onion to the batter and flavor the sauce with onion. Add the sprinkling of cheese and brown as before.

died. But I'll take it out on her. "Oh, don't kill her." "Kill her?" said Joe. "When you want revenge on a woman you don't kill her—you go for her looks. You slit her nostrils, you slash her ears. We'll get her lights out."

Huck dashed down the road and stopped at the nearest house, where dwelt Mr. Jones, a substantial citizen popularly known as the Welshman, and his stalwart sons. The boys told what he had heard and instantly the Welshman's sons sped with their father, all armed, to the Douglas mansion.

Huck followed, but hid behind a bowlder as the Joneses neared the house. There was silence for a time and then all of a sudden an explosion of firearms and a cry. The boy dashed down the hill.

Next morning, however, he again approached the Welshman's home and was heartily welcomed. He was given breakfast and was told that the two plotters had escaped and that the constables had begun a search for them.

"I wish we had a description of them," the Welshman said.

"Oh, I saw them," Huck said. "One's that deaf and dumb Spaniard that's been around here—"

"What—'the deaf and dumb Spaniard'?"

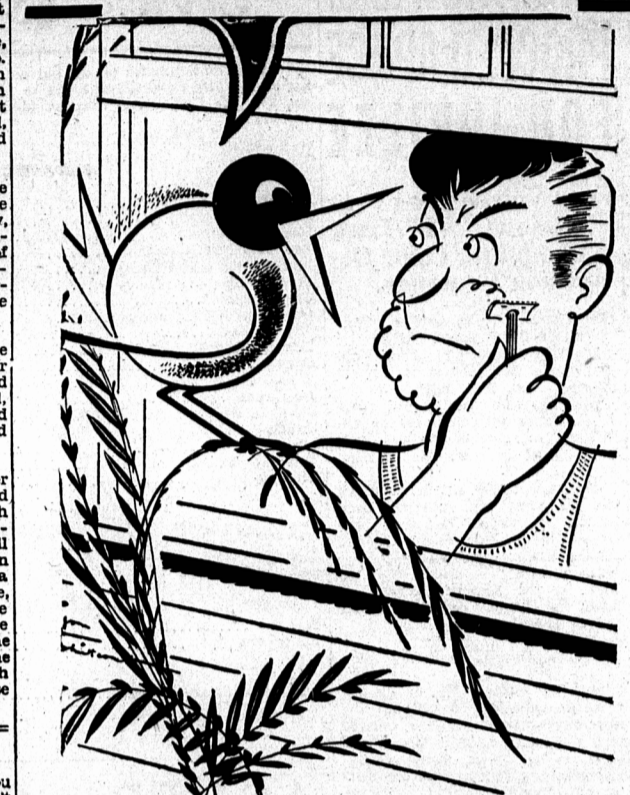

Huck hesitated.

"Tain't a Spaniard—it's Injun Joe!" he blurted out.

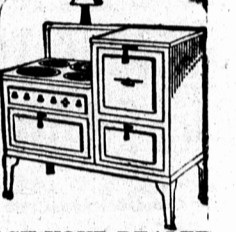

The Welshman sent one of his sons to tell the officers of this development and went to tell Huck that the fleeing pair had dropped the box he had seen with the treasure. Huck's relief, had contained, not the treasure, as he supposed, but a set of burglar's tools.

SEARCH FOR INJUN JOE

Search for Injun Joe proved fruitless, and Tom, a hero once more, was afraid half the time that he would not be. It was the boy's harassed conscience that had made him go to Potter's lawyer with the story that saved Muff's life. As for Huck, his confidence in the human race was well-nigh obliterated.

But when Tom came to him with a proposal that they go treasure hunting, Huck agreed. Tradition had it that the famous Murrell gang had hidden loot in the neighborhood and the boys, night after night, nearly broke their backs digging deep but futile holes in places Tom selected with no guide except imagination.

Finally Tom decided that a "haunted" house on Cardiff Hill must be the place, and thither the faithful Huck followed him. The house was weird and depressing, but as they walked through it, familiarly modified their fears and they even dared to venture upstairs. Their search there was unavailing and they were about to descend when they heard the voices of two men.

The boys lay flat on the upstairs floor, their eyes to knotholes, and saw the men enter. In one, they recognized the "old deaf and dumb Spaniard," as a stranger, who occasionally came to St. Petersburg, was called. He was wrapped in a serape and wore green goggles. The other man they did not recognize.

The latter was talking. "It's dangerous," he said.

Canada Saved From Massacre

By Herbert Honey
Canadian Press Staff Writer
WINNIPEG, April 24—(CP)—On the cold, grey morning of April 24, 1885, Indian scouts moved cautiously down the east and west banks of the South Saskatchewan River. They were the advance party of a military cavalcade commanded by General Sir Frederick Middleton. Their vigilance prevented a massacre that would have strengthened Louis Riel's rebellious move for a "Native Empire" in the Northwest.

The small force, 700 strong, neared the end of a 250-mile march through wintry conditions, 50 years ago today. It was a march that started at Troy (Qu'Appelle) on March 31 and ended at Batoche with the capture of Riel, on May 16. An old-fashioned blizzard was encountered at Clarke's crossing where the expedition camped on the night of April 23.

Dividing his column the following day, 35 miles south of Batoche, General Middleton moved downstream to attack his objective from two sides. Poplar bluffs covered one-third of a huge, park-like area through which the scouts, under Major Charles Bolton, of Birtle, followed a trail to Fish Creek, a small stream cut through a ravine leading to the river.

The country was well chosen for an ambush by Gabriel Dumont, wily hunter and brave lieutenant of Riel. It was his strategy but rebel tactics were upset by the courageous scouts. At a point close to the ravine rebel sharpshooters were placed with instructions to hold their fire until the main body

Has her health problems

Happy and fortunate is the bride Who enters married life In full health and vigor of mind and body. Perhaps the importance of robust health At the time of marriage is sometimes overlooked. But the cares and worries of the household And the tremendous strain of baby's coming Demand an abundance of rich, red blood And a healthy, buoyant nervous system. Modern life and present financial stringencies Tend to make the life of the woman in the home More difficult and more nerve racking. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food can be of very great benefit to you Both before and after baby's coming. By restoring health of body and mind It will save you from the irritabilities Which tend to destroy the happiness of the home. It will restore hope and confidence. At a time when ill health lets you see only the dark side of things.

INDIA'S WOMEN IN EDUCATION

(By The Canadian Press)
BOMBAY, April 23—Nearly three times as many successful women candidates passed through the portals of the Bombay University last year, than five years ago.

In 1930 587 women were successful in the various examinations held by the University. Today the number has swelled to 1,306. The increase has been steady and is more marked in the arts section than in any other.
