THE YELLOW SLUB

BEGIN HERE TODAY! HENRY RAND, 55, a business man, is found murdered in a cheap hotel in GRAFTON. Police find a woman's handkerchief and a yellow ticket stub from a theater in Montreal.

"I'M BEGINNING TO THINK THAT'S THE ANSWER TO YOUR FATHER'S MURDER," SAID BARRY. "HE WAS IN SOMEONE'S WAY."

NARD, a cabaret singer. A search is started for her. Jimmy meets and falls in love with MARY LOWELL. Later he encounters Olga Maynard, and she faints when he tells her she is suspected of murder.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER 15.

The anonymous note, followed by the mysterious telephone call, left Jimmy Rand bewildered. He got little sleep on the train ride to Grafton.

He was not sure whether it was a practical joke or whether the note was from someone who really had an object in getting him, out of town.

He tossed about, recalling in sequence the swiftly moving events that had transpired since he came to Montreal, and trying vainly to unravel the plot that seemed to be weaving about him.

Perhaps his father's actual murderer, or someone who was involved in the crime had learned he was in Montreal and feared detection if he remained.

That sort of melodrama would never run him off, he told himself. His mind refused to work as he wanted it to. Invariably his thoughts would come back to Mary Lowell.

It hurt him that she should cut him boldly without giving him an opportunity to explain the position she had found him in with Olga Maynard. Why should people—especially Mary Lowell—be so ready to believe the worst of him? His jaw set grimly.

Back in Grafton he went straight home to his mother's house. Her old sharp air and scolding manner were gone. In their place was an attitude of resigned dejection. He knew without being told that she brooded incessantly over Henry Rand's death.

"Are you back home to stay, James?" she asked while his arms were still about her.

"No, mother. Just for a day. I've got to see Barry. Briefly he told her why, and she wept silently.

"Where's Janet?" he asked.

"She had gone to do the marketing, Martha Rand told him. Just when he saw Janet coming along the old familiar boardwalk, her arms full of bundles.

She greeted him with a long kiss and clung to him but she seemed cheerful and composed.

"Fine, Sis. I've come home to arrange with the district attorney for the release of a woman who may lead us to the murderer. Sounds mysterious doesn't it? An it is, too. It's got me all up in the air."

He told her of the progress they had made in Montreal.

It seemed she had the job of playing the piano in a moving picture theater. Martha sighed audibly as Janet told him.

"Mother doesn't approve," Janet smiled at him. "She doesn't like to have me out in the evenings."

"I don't either, Sis. Why did you do it?"

"There's enough money to keep things going for quite a while without me. Besides, I'll be back home before very long. What does Barry think of it—or don't you see Barry any more?"

"Yes, she saw Barry frequently. He didn't like her working one bit. Told her she was a fool. That's the second time he's called me a fool," she said. "The other you know—"

It has to be cleaned up. I'm speaking from a selfish point of view. The town is worked up over it, and they look to the police and to me to clear it up.

"Suppose, now, that we let this Maynard woman loose and she cleared out. Why I'd look like the biggest sucker in the world. I've got to think of next November, you know. That's election time."

"On the other hand," Barry put in, "if she turns up this man, the case will be cleared up and you could run for governor."

"Remember this, Jack. All you've got on the woman is circumstantial evidence. Nobody's going to convict her."

"If I were sure that she wouldn't skip out," Gilbreath answered slowly, "I'd do it."

"I'll be personally responsible for her," Mr. Gilbreath, said Jimmy.

"Remember my interest in this thing is even stronger than yours. That's why I'm staying in Montreal. I'll see that she reports every day to the police. We'll fix it so she can't get away if she tried."

Gilbreath smiled at Jimmy's earnestness. "That would be pretty hard to do, Rand. However, your interests in it are larger than the state's. I suppose it's taking a chance—but I'll do it."

Janet met Barry and Jimmy at the door with a telegram in her hand.

It just came, Jimmy. Is it important?"

He crumpled it slowly and read it, then crumpled it slowly in his hand. "No, Sis, it's not important." He led Barry into the living-room, leaving Janet where she stood. She looked at him curiously, then turned away.

He threw the telegram toward Barry. "Funny," he remarked, and sat down.

"I don't get it, Jim," Barry was puzzled. He read it again: "Stay where you are." It was unsigned.

"I don't get it myself, Barry. Listen." With hands clasped on his knee and a puzzled frown wrinkling his forehead, he made Barry eyewitness to the last night in his room in Montreal—the finding of the anonymous note and the phone call that followed.

Barry sat thoughtful silence. Then—"It has something to do with the murder, Jim. Your in somebody's way and they won't hesitate to remove you if you don't get out. I'm beginning to think that's the answer of your father's murder—he, too, was in someone's way."

"Jim, just how much of your dad's past life do you know? Were there any enemies?"

"Not a one in the world, Barry, and as far as I know he never was in Montreal in his life."

"Jim—forgive me, old man—was there a woman?"

Jimmy shot him a piercing look. His mouth set in a hard, straight line. "You know blamed well, Barry."

"Don't misunderstand me, Jim. Did your father have anything in his private life that—"

"His private life, Barry, was like an open book."

"You're surprised," said Barry softly, "how little we know of one another's private lives. This thing, Jim, comes out of your father's past." He repeated: "Out of the past."

COCOANUT OIL MAKES A SPLENDID SHAMPOO

Do not use prepared shampoos or anything else that contains too much free alkali, for this is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Mulsified coconut oil shampoo, for it is pure and entirely greaseless. It is inexpensive and beats any other thing else all to pieces. You get Mulsified at any drug store, and five ounces will last the whole family for months.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified is all that is required. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to manage.

Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust dirt and dandruff. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified. Beware of imitations. Look for the name Watkins on the package.

JOAN OF ARC

COLOR CUT-OUTS

THE PROPHECY OF MERLIN

This is the second day's chapter of the story of Joan of Arc. Children who follow the Color Cut-Outs for the next two weeks will have a complete set of paper dolls with which to act out the famous story.

Now there was a prophecy current in France at the time that Joan lived, an old prophecy of Merlin, that "the kingdom lost by a woman shall be saved by a woman."

The woman who had lost it was Isabeau of Bavaria, the wicked queen. In the east of France it was said that the deliverer was to be a maid from the marshes of Lorraine.

Joan knew of this prophecy and in her mind it became blended with her own ardent faith and high aspirations. Night and day the child brooded on the sorrows of her country. She fasted regularly and went often to confession, so often, indeed, that her young companions scolded her for being over religious.

(Here is a man's costume that Joan will wear when she goes to

MADRID, Feb. 14.—Court circles in Spain were shocked today by the murder of the Duchess Maria Luisa of Sevilla by her husband, Lieut.-Col. Francisco Jose Bourbon, who is believed to have acted while under a temporary aberration as the outcome of a domestic quarrel. Her 18-year-old daughter and 14-year-old son witnessed the shooting, which occurred yesterday evening in the Madrid home of the couple.

It is said that Colonel Bourbon returned home last night and found his wife and family at dinner and became angry because they had not waited for him. After a short quarrel the Colonel drew a revolver and fired six shots into his wife's body, causing instant death. The couple were first cousins and made a love match in 1907.

Lieu-Col. Bourbon is a grandson of the Infante Enrique, brother of Francisco de Asia, who was the husband of Queen Isabella II. Through his mother he is related to the Cuban family of de la Torre. His father, Lieut.-Gen. Francisco de Bourbon, was one of the leading members of the royal Bourbon Anjou house. The colonel's brothers are the Duke of Sevilla, the Marquesses de Villamanilla de Perales, de Baldoa Squillace.

1,363,000 French Killed in War

PARIS, Feb. 14.—France lost 1,363,000 men in the war, according to the official record, and with a view of showing how that loss has affected the economic life of the country, Gaston Gadoux, former president of the Paris Statistical Society, has drawn up tables showing how these dead men were employed before the war.

The biggest loss was to land workers, out of a total agricultural male population of five and one half million.

Industry gave the next largest figure, with 235,000 out of two million. There fell 159,000 commercial men out of 1,327,000.

The civil service gave 21,000 out of a total of half a million, the liberal professions 40,000 out of a total of less than a quarter million.

One man in every 28 in France, was killed, 1 in 25 in Germany and one in 66 in England.

Even with the return of Alsace-Lorraine, the population of France is still less than in 1914. With one seventh of her agricultural male population killed the slowness of France's recovery becomes somewhat more understandable.
