BRUCE GAVE FIRST COUNTY BATTALION

Scotch From Detroit and Germans Thronged Col. Weir's Unit—Where and How Voluntarism Succeeded

The secretary of the Walkerton Old Boys' association estimates that in every block in Detroit, there is at least one native of Bruce county, Ontario. The chances are about even that any hustling young man by the name of McGregor or McTavish or McPherson you meet in the Michigan city, came from Ripley, Kincardine or Walkerton. Some of them have not remained in Detroit. They came back to fill the ranks of Bruce's overseas battalion, and that is one of the reasons the 160th recruited to full establishment the most quickly of all the county battalions. The Scotch haven't a monopoly on the 160th, for strange to say, a big percentage of the regiment's strength is recruited from the German-Canadians of Hanover, Midway or Warton. But it is not too much to say that the Scots became the backbone of the battalion.

Knew His County

After Bruce county had sent hundreds of her sons to the fighting line the call came in November, 1915, for a battalion of 1,250 men, to be recruited within the boundaries of the county and to be officered by Bruce county officers. Lieutenant-Colonel A. Weir was appointed officer commanding and he set about in an energetic fashion to disprove the common belief that Bruce could not supply 1,250 men by the voluntary system. Nobody knew better than the colonel the military possibilities of the district assigned to him, for in 1881 he entered the ranks of the Thirty-second Bruce battalion and held every rank from private to colonel since that time. He knew where to expect the biggest enlistment and where to apply the greatest pressure. He also knew where he could get a staff of competent officers, from the former Bruce boys now located in all parts of the continent.

Major From Kentucky

Colonel Weir went to the United States for his second in command, Major Moffat. The major had been a soldier all his life. He is a veteran of the Spanish-American War and has held important military posts in Kentucky. He was inspector-general of the state militia there. Major Moffat is the inventor of a hand grenade now being used in the fighting on the west front. It is constructed on the same principle as a shrapnel shell, timed to burst automatically five seconds after it leaves the thrower's hand. Colonel Weir and Major Moffat proved an excellent recruiting team. The 160th was organized long after most of the county battalions in Ontario, but by May, 1916, 1,250 men and officers mobilized at Walkerton, in addition to a base company of 100 men to which newly-enlisted men are constantly being attached.

TRAINING THE SOLDIERS

Sim Vaughan of Tigers Helped Keep Comrades Fit

J. E. S. Vaughan, commonly known as "Sim," one of the most widely known and best trainers in Canada, enlisted for active overseas duty with the 205th Sportsmen's Battalion. "Sim" was connected with the Tiger Football Club for fourteen years as a trainer, and when the new Tiger war team was organized he decided that he would continue to be a Tiger in the new role of soldiering. He is an old athlete of fame, and many years ago was continually before the eyes of the public as a baseball player, boxer and trainer of athletes, boxers and wrestlers. He took a prominent part in semi-pro boxing bouts and gained considerable notoriety. He also played with the Dominions and Ontarios in the southwestern league for four years as a pitcher. Sim Vaughan is probably better known as a trainer than an athlete. He trained the world-renowned sprinter, Bobby Kerr, who joined the 205th Sportsmen's Battalion as adjutant; Harry Fraser, Andy Wilson, long-distance runner, and Gordon Glennie. He also trained Charles Conkie, the world's greatest wrestler at his weight; Pee Wee Oslar, 115-pound amateur champion, and Bobby Wilson, who won the international light-weight championship. As a baseball trainer "Sim" worked in connection with Page's International team in 1908 and Knotty Lee's team in 1912.

Curfew at 6:15 P.M.

The precautions against air raids necessitated the alteration at Chester of a centuries-old custom. Since the distant days of the Norman Conquest the curfew at Chester has been rung, without it, it is believed, a break, from 8.50 p.m. to 9 p.m. each night. For the dark months, however, it rang at 6.15 p.m., and then, as the days lengthened, the time was advanced until the traditional hour was reached.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH ARE ONE IN CANADA

Official Eye-witnesses Hopeful Over Outcome of Present War in Cementing Union of Ancient Foes

Sir Max Aitken, writing as official eye-witness with the Canadian Forces, argues from history that Britain and France, English and French Canada are forever united. He cites with eloquent reference to Crecy and Joan of Arc. Sir Max says, in part: "Empire is not inconsistent with liberty; none the less the reconciliation of French Canada to the Empire was one of peculiar difficulty because of the secular antagonism between Great Britain and France. In Europe we have fought feudal France and monarchial France and the republican France and imperial France. Times out of number our ancestors, whose blood still flows red in our veins and whose thoughts dominate our thoughts struggled fiercely against each other at Crecy, Blenheim, Minden, Busaco and Waterloo; and far beyond the European empire the conflict extended, from the plains of the Ganges to the mouth of the Mississippi.

But we always fought each other as plain men and brave men should. Even Napoleon, who is sometimes credited with the invention of many modern Prussian doctrines, was a strict observer of the rules of war. With the Anglo-French Alliance vanished the last great obstacle to a thorough union of the two races of the Dominion.

Ancient Wars Unite Us

We come back to the poet for the reason why the two great Western races of Europe are reconciled. Kipling seizes at once on the battles of long ago as the very reason for our mutual liking. "When did you refrain from us or we refrain from you? Ask the wave that has not watched war between us two. Others held us for a while, but with weaker charms, these we quitted at the call for each other's arms."

The very differences of the races both in the new world and the old afford ground for an eternal attraction, and it would be difficult to say whether the French admire more that which was done at Ypres by the Canadians and again by the Guards than the British Empire respects the heroic defence of Verdun. We have known each other's faults so long that we are ready to accept each other's virtues. The French mind is logical and passionate; the English restrains its natural ardor under a show of indetermination. We have admired French literature as much as France has admired our political system.

On Historic Ground

"Eager towards the known delight equally we strive; each the other's mystery, terror, need and love." But the poet is not prepared to acquit the two nations of those crimes which they have shared together when we burned Joan of Arc. "Pardoning all necessity no pardoning will efface, that undying shame we shared in Rouen's market place." The links of history are, indeed, more intimate between the two races than between any other; but how many people realized it when the British army advanced, to overthrow the Germans on the Marne, from the wood with the significant name of Crecy, or when the recruit goes down from his base camp at Rouen and looks at the statue of Joan of Arc in the square.

INVENTED LEE-ENFIELD

Canadian Made Greatest Discovery Which Germans Stole

It is not generally known that the Lee-Enfield rifle was invented by a Canadian, the late James P. Lee, of Galt. In an article in the Reporter of that city, the former editor, Mr. J. P. Jaffray, tells the story of Lee. As a boy he doted on firearms, and as a young man went over the border and started a gun factory in Milwaukee. During the Civil War he made the Lee carbine for the Northern cavalry, and after the war joined the staff of the Remingtons at Ilion, N.Y., where he designed a number of sporting rifles. He evolved the "magazine" system of loading and perfected it during a vacation in Galt and made other improvements still in use. He went over to London and had his weapon adopted by the War Office. Mr. Jaffray says: "In the Remington and Hartford shops, where Mr. Lee constructed his gun, there worked at the time one Mauser and one Krag. Both these men stole the Lee inventions, and other foreign Governments were quick to secure them. But the Lee-Enfield is still the best of the lot, according to all accounts. And it was an old Canadian boy—an old Galt boy—who placed it in the hands of the British soldier." The Lee-Enfield has been remodeled more than once since James P. Lee perfected it. The short rifle of to-day is probably a great deal lighter than the original design, but the working principles of it are substantially the same.

—SUCCESSFUL PICNIC.—The young men of Mt. Carmel, who have recently organized and founded a society under the name of Joan of Arc to the worthy cause of educating the young men from the parish, held a picnic in order to gather a fund sufficient to send a student to college at the beginning of the term of 1916. The picnic was successful in every sense of the word. The ladies of the parish unanimously responded to the call by contributing such a basket full of the necessaries for the picnic, which amount was then sufficient to accommodate these present. Although no handbills or advertisements of any kind had been provided, the number of patronizers was large. Only two tables were dressed as it was only an afternoon enjoyment, but in spite of the nature of the picnic, over $200.00 was realized, which was above all expectations.—R.
