Tenders for Silver Black Foxes

Sealed tenders will be received by the undersigned until 26th, of August for the purchase of two Pairs extra Silver Black Foxes, owned by the Eldorado Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd., one pair two years old, having had a litter this spring, the other pair pups, brother and sister. The pair of pups may be tendered for together, or separately, as suits buyers.

BREEDING, &c.

The two-year-old female, also, the pair of pups, is taken from litters of that famous fox styled in the Prospectus of "The Sovereign Silver Black Fox Co. Ltd." Page 3 of which Dr. Dalton is chairman, "the most prolific fox in the world."

She was formerly owned by the Hon. Chas. Dalton, and carries the aluminum button in her ear, referred to on same page of above mentioned Prospectus, in Chas. Dalton's certificate, as "only used by him on his best stock."

She raised 45 pups in seven years for Mr. Dalton, (being of a nervous temperament her removal to new quarters doubtless caused the loss of her litter last year,) this year however, she was mated with a splendid young Rayner dog, and raised five black beauties, two of which we now offer for sale.

Mr. Dalton has tested the London market with a few pups of her offspring some years ago, and some of them nearly touched the $2000.00 mark.

The mate of the two-year-old female was selected from the Dalton ranch under a written agreement, by a foxman and fur dealer and pronounced by Professor Jones, as one of the best specimens ever privileged to see.

In consideration of the above, all of which we can prove by documentary evidence if necessary, we can justly claim this quartette are equal, and in some respects superior, to any foxes on the market.

For further information, apply to undersigned. Address all tenders,

-MIMINGASH.—Cod-fishing seems to be very good here but mackerel and herring are reported scarce. The Cutter Nelson seems to be watching the illegal fishing of lobsters very strictly, as she is seen daily on these shores. This hustling fishing village was more than startled on Monday evening when several young men from the Western Metropolis arrived with camp, guns, and baggage to spend a few days on the shore. Some natives hearing exaggerated accounts of the war suggested that no foreigners be allowed to camp here, who knows says one, but they are Germans in disguise. Anyway the Camp Gladukum was pitched on the shore of Mr. James Callaghan. The boys are seeming to enjoy themselves fishing, shooting, and having clam-bakes.—The Misses Pearl McNeill and Laura Hammel are visiting at the home of Mr. Wm. P. Callaghan.—Mr. James A. McNeill, M.P., and Hon. Chas. Dalton paid a visit here on Tuesday last.—Haying is almost finished, the reports being a good heavy crop well made. The grain crop in general never looked better.

JUDGE DISCUSSES STATUS OF CANADA

In Theory Citizens of Host Nations Are Prisoners Without Civil Rights.

MONTREAL, Aug. The exact status of Canada, under war has been declared, was explained by Mr. Justice Gervais, of the Provincial Court of Appeals, in the course of a chat at the Court House. His Lordship as is known, has been for many years professor of international law at Laval University.

"Yes," said His Lordship, in reply to a question, "Canada is in a state of war ever since the proclamation which England addressed to Germany. When a sovereign state goes to war its dependencies and colonies become involved immediately.

"As to the status of citizens of hostile nations resident in Canada, they lose with the declaration of war, whatever rights they have under the civil and the criminal law of Canada, and their position is determined by international law. According to theory, those resident subjects of a hostile power are entirely at the mercy of their enemies, both as regards their persons and their belongings. Losing their rights before the civil courts, they cannot, for example, enforce the payment of debts due by British subjects. Of course, the theory is not strictly applied in practice but so far as the law goes, these non-combatants are our prisoners of war, and not only their goods but their lives are in our hands."

Asked for the legal view regarding the seizure of merchant ships by the British power and their conversion into men of war, His Lordship replied:

"This is quite natural. The British state has an absolute right in time of war, as well as in time of peace, under certain conditions, over all things belonging to her subjects. Especially in time of war, she has an absolute right to take possession of all the merchantmen of this kingdom, whether they belong to private individuals or to commercial companies.

"England signed the declaration of Paris of 1856, under which "la course maritime," or the usage and employment of corsairs was abolished. Before that declaration every state had the right to employ privateers, who were employed by the King to make war upon his enemies, giving bonds to behave themselves according to International Law, and to divide the proceeds of the profits with the state. That usage gave rise to many abuses, because sometimes under the mask of a corsair one found a pirate. Then all the states with the exception of one agreed to abolish the employment of corsairs. "But the great naval powers, and especially England, found after that date that they had made a poor bargain, for the simple reason that after the war was declared, they could not use their numerous and powerful merchantmen. That is the reason why most of the states resorted to the conversion of the latter after the opening of war by taking possession of merchantmen and installing therein a marine officer, bearing the King's patent. Not only England, but all the other naval states have come to create after the opening of war, what are styled corsair fleets, and you now see the wisdom of that measure. Hence England today can make use for the purpose of war of all the merchantmen of her immense Empire.

"On the other hand one must remember that the British state has not placed any hardship upon any of the great commercial companies for the simple reason that she has been subsidizing them for years in time of peace, just for the purpose of being able to ease of war to use them without any reprimand on the part of the companies. On behalf of the owners, France has done the same with her great company, La Messagerie Marine. Germany has acted in the same way with regard to her North German-Lloyd and all other navigation companies.

"In a word, England by asking the C. P. R. Steamship Company and the Allan Line to put their ships at her disposal is merely doing what is perfectly legal, both from the point of view of the public laws of England and the international law of the world.

"As you see, the conversion of merchantmen into men of war, is very simple, since the Britannic state had only to replace the civil captain by a maritime officer, bearing the King's patent, that is, his commission, which implies the right to kill and to make war."
