THE SOUL

The soul is a fire that darts its rays through all the senses; it is in this fire that existence consists; all the observations and all the efforts of philosophers ought to turn towards this centre and moving power of our sentiments and our ideas.

IN MEMORIAM

WILLIAM HUGGAN

There passed peacefully away on Sunday, May 7th, 1933, William Huggan, of Hermitage, aged 69 years. Not being well for a great many years he took pneumonia and was sick only seven days when he passed away. During that time he suffered a great deal. He leaves to mourn, one brother George, and one sister, Emma, who sadly mourn the loss of a kind loving brother. Honest in all his dealings, an obliging, industrious workman, he will be very much missed in the community. He was kind and good in his need, good to attend church and funerals. His Minister, Mr. Pierce, was to see him three times and spoke words of comfort to him. His funeral was on Tuesday, May 9th, and was largely attended. The service at the house and grave was conducted by Rev. Mr. Pierce. He was laid to rest beside his mother, who predeceased him eleven years ago, there to wait the resurrection morn. The hymns sung, were "Lord is My Shepherd," "Jesus Lover of my Soul," and "Nearer my God to Thee." The pall bearers were his good neighbors and friends, Felix Murphy, Leonard Murphy, Frederick Vickerson, Callum J. Bruce, William Masters and John J. Curley.

BLACK GOWNS SET OFF WITH WHITE ACCESSORIES SMART

NEW YORK, July 19. — White accessories with black frocks are seen at smart luncheons and teas. At a recent restaurant one chic guest wore a little black marocain suit with a sailor hat and blouse of crisp white cotton lace, while another appeared in a black marocain dress accented by a Pilgrim collar, a high toque and gauntlet gloves of white pique.

The evening mode has likewise taken to black and white, many black crepe frocks being worn with capes of white organdie or packets of crisp white pique.

GRACEFUL GOWNS AT ASCOT AID WOMAN'S CHARM, SAYS EDITOR

LONDON, July 19. — The curious thing about Ascot this year was not only that debutantes wore dresses reminiscent of the Edwardian era, but also their mothers and the older women chose full-length dresses of chiffon and georgette made on long graceful lines with softly feminine trimmings, says a woman society editor. As a result, they appeared more gracious and charming than they have for many a year.

It would be hard to disapprove of this season's debutantes, she thinks. They are very different from their predecessors of last year or the year before.

FEEDING FARM HORSES WHEN AT HARD WORK

The chief item of importance on the farm field is the general care given to farm horses. The problem of feeding horses is one of prime importance when animals are put to hard work. The subject will be better understood if it is remembered that the horse's stomach is small, containing but two to four quarts. The paunch of the cow, on the contrary, is capacious, holding some 44 gallons. In the horse the large intestines (cecum and colon) at the end of the small intestines which is some 72 feet long, serve practically the same purpose as the paunch of the cow. Most of water taken in by the horse passes quickly to the cecum and there, and in the colon, the hay or other roughage is digested, chiefly by bacterial action.

Feeding Tired Animal

Theoretically, the horse should first drink water, then eat roughage and then eat grain. It seems likely that a large quantity of water, drunk by a thirsty horse directly after eating grain, must wash some of the grain out of the intestine before it has been perfectly or sufficiently acted upon by the gastric juice and other digestive fluids in the stomach. When that occurs indigestion, slight or severe, results. The horse that has to hurry in masticating grain, and take its drinking water in great quantities as it goes from the stable to work, will not be so likely to thrive, remain healthy and work efficiently as the horse that is given plenty of time to masticate grain, after resting for a time and being "watered," and that does not gulp down gallons of water just before working.

When water can be taken at any and all times the horse, by instinct, takes the necessary amounts, at the times it will do the most good and water, so taken, causes no derangement. It is advisable to take the chill off drinking water when the horse drinks, when hot and tired, before being fed at noon. Tank water, at such times, may with impunity be taken in moderate amounts. Provide some medium of giving the work horse an opportunity to drink when at work on the field. The horse needs water, at such times, more than does man, and when supplied with it will work more efficiently, and be unlikely to suffer from heat exhaustion or sunstroke.

In Hot Weather

In very hot weather, when the work is hard, it is advisable to let the horse have a small drink of water (not intensely cold), then eat one or two pounds of hay, while cooling and resting, and then be given more water, just before eating grain. It is a mistake to let the horse take a large amount of hay, at noon, when the work is hard, also to give the horse too little time properly to masticate its feed. If possible the harness should be removed at noon and the collar be wiped dry and then exposed to the sun. Leaving the collar on and letting sweat, hair and scales of skin dry on its bearing surface, tends to cause sore shoulders. Bathe the neck and shoulders with salty, cold water at noon.

SUCCESS IN LIFE

If you succeed in life, you must do it in spite of the efforts of others to pull you down. There is nothing in the idea that people are willing to help those who help themselves. People are willing to help a man who can't help himself, but as soon as a man is able to help himself, and does it, they join in making his life as uncomfortable as possible.
