For The Cook

APPLE-SAUCE CAKE

One-half cup butter or shortening, one cup light-brown sugar, one beaten egg; one cup each of raisins and currants, both cut fine and floured; one cup apple sauce, hot and thick; one teaspoon cinnamon, one-half teaspoon cloves, speck salt, one teaspoon soda, one-quarter teaspoon nutmeg, one and three-fourths cup cake flour. Sift the cake flour once, then measure, and add soda, salt and spices and sift together four times. Cream shortening and sugar gradually and beat well after each addition. Then add egg raisins and currants and beat after each addition. Bake in greased tube pan in moderate oven for fifty or sixty minutes. Serve fresh and unfrosted.

A Morning Smile

A young man who had come down from one of the universities, was sent to a "crammer." That learned gentleman, as soon as he met his pupil, inquired: "Have you got a good knowledge of the classics?" "Well," replied the young man, hopefully, "pretty fair. I won on the Derby and Oaks last year, but I came a bit unstick on the Leger."

EULOGIES OF DEAD STOPPED

AVRANCHES, Normandy, Aug. 25.—(U. P.)—A pastoral letter issued by the Bishop of this town forbids all eulogies of deceased people at funerals. Good people do not need to be eulogized, he writes, while the bad ones do not deserve praise. The Bishop therefore prohibits them all.

Will a Mail-Order Wife Prove a Better Helpmeet Than a Hand-Picked Wife? — Shall This Girl Marry a Man With a Daughter Older Than She is?

Dear Miss Dix—What do you think of matrimonial bureaus? I have a friend who married a man who advertised through one of them for a wife and they have been very happy. I know other people who have known each other for a long time who married and live like cats and dogs. So I believe that marriage is just a gamble anyway and it is just luck whether you get the right husband or wife. I am a man not yet married, but I had just as soon pick out my wife on the grab-bag principle as any other way. What do you think? BACHELOR.

Answer: It is true that all signs fall in dry weather and in matrimony and there is no absolutely sure way of guaranteeing a marriage being a success.

It is also true that you cannot tell beforehand what kind of husband or wife a man or a woman will make. A couple may have gone to kindergarten and made mud pies together and have been associated every day of their lives for twenty years and still find after they get married that they are perfect strangers to each other and that each has characteristics that the other never even dreamed that he or she possessed. Marriage does strange things to people and it develops in them qualities of goodness or meanness, of generosity or narrowness, of unselfishness or egotism that change them as completely as if they had taken on another incarnation.

Nothing is more common, for instance, than for a boy who has been a sort of human doormat for a girl to walk over to turn into a grinding tyrant as soon as he marries her. We have all known plenty of young men who lavished presents on girls and never wearied of giving them good times who turned into tightwad husbands out of whom their wives had to jimmy every nickel. And we have known men who simply camped in girls' parlors until they were thrown out at night who were never willing to spend a single evening at home after they got married.

And we know frivolous girls who have turned into the most domestic of wives and domestic girls who, after marriage, couldn't be dragged into the kitchen. We have known extravagant girls who wasted their fathers' money who kept a death grip on their husbands' pocketbooks. We have known girls who were so mild that butter wouldn't melt in their mouths turn into naggers and rim little puritan wives take to night clubs and whoopee parties.

But all of this doesn't prove that it is safe to marry sight unseen or that happiness in marriage is merely a matter of luck. On the contrary, it merely shows that since the odds are against you, you should use more care and discrimination in selecting your husband or wife.

It may be that you cannot know everything about them, but if you use average intelligence you can ascertain enough to enable you to make a mighty good guess. You can find out what sort of family a girl and boy belong to and you won't be far wrong if you conclude that John and Mary will make pretty much the same sort of men and women and husbands and wives that their parents are. It is as safe to go by the name of the maker in selecting a husband and wife as it is in selecting an automobile.

Nor do you need to be a Sherlock Holmes to be able to deduce after a few months or a year's acquaintance what sort of disposition a man and woman have, how much brains they possess and how they are likely to react to any situation.

Unconsciously we all give ourselves away in every act of our lives. We show whether we are peevish or philosophical, whether we are narrow-minded or prejudiced, whether we have the courage to carry on or are quitters, whether we are entertaining companions or bores.

And surely with this information we could take marriage out of the gambling class and put it in the sure-thing category. The trouble is that we don't do it. Nine people out of ten use their hearts instead of their heads in picking out their wives.

A girl marries a man because she likes the way he dances or a man selects a girl for a wife because she has blonde hair instead of black, and they don't make any effort to find out anything at all about each other's character or even whether they are congenial or not. They marry perfect strangers and when they get acquainted they find that they haven't a thought nor a desire in common.

And that is why marriage is so often a failure, but marrying an individual who is a mail-order husband or wife isn't going to help matters. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a girl of 17, madly in love with a widower of 47 who has three children. The oldest is a girl of 18, who says that if I marry her father she will still be manager of the house and that by her and the other children I will be considered an outsider. Will I be happy if I marry this man? BLONDE ELLEN.

Answer: I don't think there will be many of your blonde locks left, Ellen, if you undertake to be stepmother in a family in which there is a daughter older than you are. You are crazy even to think of such a thing as marrying a man who is thirty years older than you are and undertaking his ready-made family. And any man of 47 who would marry a 17-year-old girl and put her over his family of nearly grown children should be locked up in an asylum for the incurably feeble-minded.

There couldn't possibly be but one outcome to such a mad venture, and that would be misery for all concerned. In the first place, you would be utterly wretched with a husband so much older than yourself and one who would want to sit by the fire at nights instead of stepping out and who would not have a taste or an interest in common with you. Inside of six months you would fall out of love with him and in love with some boy of your own age who would want to dance and pet and have a good time just as you do.

And the man would be terribly disappointed in you, because you are nothing but a child and wouldn't know how to keep house nor manage a family and you would want to run around and play, as is natural at your time of life, while he would expect you to be a thrifty and industrious helpmeet.

And what rows there would be between you and the children! The Kilkenny cats would be a peace league compared to you. They would resent their father foisting another child on them as a stepmother; you would have no authority with them and there would be three against one in the unequal battle and each side would be running with tales of the other to the husband and father, and, my, how the fur would fly.

Just realize, Ellen, that your thinking you are in love with this man is a passing madness and forget it and send your elderly sweetheart away and let him marry some woman of his own age. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix—My husband and I have been married seven months and have been very happy except for one thing. I consider his attitude toward women very free. He has a habit of patting their hands or backs or paying them compliments and I find this very insulting. He thinks this is narrow-minded in me to take offense. Am I extremely jealous or unusually sensitive? SASKIA.

Answer: I think you are making a mountain out of a molehill. There is much more familiarity between the sexes now than there used to be, but it means nothing whatever. For a man to give a woman a pat on the back or hand or pay her a compliment has no significance whatever either to her or to him. Only you read into it your own jealous thoughts.

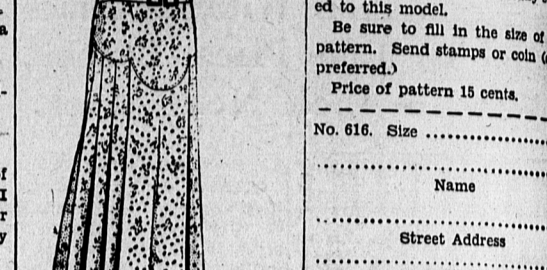

There is no surer way to set a man to thinking of other women than to be jealous of them. DOROTHY DIX.

Pimples Over Face Caused Severe Pain. Cuticura Healed.

"I had pimples and blackheads for nearly two years. The pimples were scattered all over my face and were hard, large and red, causing severe pain. They itched and burned and when I scratched it caused eruptions. The irritation prevented me from sleeping. I used different remedies but they did not help any. A friend recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment so I purchased some, and Ointment I was completely healed." (Signed) Steve Barowicki, Crowtherville, Sask.

WHAT THE GRAY HOUSE HID

I shall be greatly surprised." "We found him with matches and gasoline all ready to set fire to your house," the woman contributed.

"I don't doubt it," Pelham said dryly; "and I don't doubt that you were glad enough to stop him. If he had burned the Gray house, you would have died in its ruins. So far you haven't made out a case."

She shrugged her shoulders. "If you don't want to be reasonable," she said, "that is your affair. If you want a murder trial, with a relative of the Hanby's in danger of hanging, call in the police. Two credible witnesses saw the murder committed."

"Madam," said the professor coldly, "you lie!" "Poor old huckleberry hawk!" she mocked. You've probably forgotten very conveniently, but you'll be hanged, for all that, if your police ever know about it!" There was a certain insolence about her that compelled admiration. "We may as well tell the truth," she went on. "Fred and I have been fond of each other for years. His wife wouldn't consent to a divorce, and my husband can't be located. Fred arranged this place where we could be undisturbed. He didn't fill in the lake completely, as you've no doubt found out. He fenced it with barbed wire, and planted thorn hedges to keep out trespassers."

Hanby interrupted her. "Who was it telephoned me all that stuff about keeping it a bird assure the court that had I be-
