Heedless Youth

Girl of 16 Resents Mother's Objection To Early Marriage

DEAR MISS DIX: My 16-year-old daughter and her boy friend, who is only 18, think I am very cruel and unreasonable because I object to their being married while they are so young and before they have any means of support. They say I am old-fashioned and that I am trying to pick out my daughter's husband, and they threaten to run off and be married secretly. But it is not true that I am trying to interfere with their lives. I am only attempting to get them to wait until they are in a position to make their marriage a success.

They are both still in school. The boy has no father to depend upon, as his mother divorced his father and he doesn't even know where he is. Also, the boy is spoiled by his mother. He is selfish, rude, high-tempered, with no education except his high school training and no trade. He hasn't even decided what he would like to do towards making a living.

Don't you think I am right in saying that it would be the part of wisdom to defer marriage until they are ready for it?

WORRIED MOTHER

ANSWER: When a boy of 18 and a girl of 16 get married without any means of support, they are simply defying Fate, and nothing short of a miracle will keep them from landing in the divorce court. Love's young dream doesn't last long when it encounters dependence, poverty, shabbiness, and sponging on relatives who do not want to be burdened with them. That is not because they are avaricious. It is because they have to eat, and be clothed, and have a roof to cover them. Nobody can be romantic and sentimental on an empty stomach.

NEED PARENTAL ADVICE

It is folly to ignore these palpable facts, and thus it becomes the bounden duty of all parents to do everything possible to keep their children from marrying until they have some definite way of making a living. It doesn't require a fortune for them to marry on, but it does require a meal ticket. And any parents who can induce their love-lorn kids to put off the wedding until the prospective bridegroom has a steady job does them the greatest possible service.

We often hear an impetuous lad boast that he has as good a right to starve a wife as any other man, but that is not true. No man has the right to take upon himself the responsibilities of marriage unless he is able to meet them.

DEAR MISS DIX: When we were married, ten years ago we were flooded with advice on how to be happy though married. My prospective in-laws said: "Have a large family immediately." My own family said: "Wait until you get on your feet financially, then have a small family." Older friends said: "Don't be swept overboard by sentimentality. Enjoy life together without burdening yourself with children. They hold you down." Mere acquaintances warned us: "Children usually divide a husband and wife."

Well, we went our way and we have had a full, happy life, but people never leave us alone. Now they are after us to adopt children. Of course, kids are wonderful and a great addition to marriage, but we have found out that it is quite possible to get along comfortably without them. Will you appraise the public of that fact?

A HAPPY WIFE.

ANSWER: Consider it said. However, there is no possible way of choking off the advisers and getting them to attend to their own business and leave you free to manage your own. One of the eternal mysteries is why people who have messed up their lives can tell you exactly how you can be healthy and happy and make a million dollars.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am in my forties and a widower around 76 has asked me to marry him. He has a comfortable home, a car, and money, and is everything a woman would want in a husband and I am sure I would be happy with him. Does his age make any difference?

MARY

ANSWER: Many psychologists contend that an elderly husband is the better risk than a young one and that, anyway, 20 or 30 years don't make any difference, provided the man and woman are congenial. Certainly a woman who is in her forties has scrapped her romantic fancies and can find much happiness in a friendship with a man she likes and admires and who can give her all the comforts that every woman craves.

Whiter Clothes

When white clothes have turned yellow from washings, put them into a boiler half-full of water, to which a handful of salt and washing soda mixed has been added. Bring to a boil and keep simmering for a few hours. Rinse clothes in plenty of cold water and hang in the sun. They will come out perfectly white. Repeat a few days later if necessary.

Tarnished Silver

Tarnished silverware will look like new if placed in potato water and allowed to stand for one hour. Then take out and wash.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

At Alderley, we were so eager to commence work today that even Jamie sitting in Jock's place at breakfast table said with some impatience: "You needn't think that I can wait till dinner time for this to cool." He indicated the bowl of porridge in front of him, which he found so hot that he "had to add so much milk, I can't see one sign of the sugar" distressing state of affairs to Jamie, to whom "seeing is believing." Like the bad and good weather he continues to come and go. Yesterday afternoon's quiet had brought him and his family, including the young creeping fellow to tea, and it so happened that at the going home time, and for the reason at all that I knew of Jamie's footsteps were lagging and there were wistful backward looks when he made his way to the truck. And James who notices his every change of expression said in a resigned but nevertheless pleased way: "Oh well, Karolyn, I guess you had better let him stay." And then Jamie piped up blithely: "Granddaddy and I have got to start the banking tomorrow."

And while Jamie must of necessity loiter over his eating the morning sun splashed the windows of the kitchen and lay bright and mellow on the walls. Lovely it was after the spell of dark weather and as one went later about the work, instinctively a snatch of a song was on one's lips. The sunlight lingered on the burnished leaves of the vines entwined on the rose arbour, and lit Jock's going to his plowing, the horses with steps refreshed by their day of rest.

It was after the morning chime had been completed that Jamie and his grand-father went to the banking of a barn first and later his house. Jamie came in to console me about the latter. "And what," he asked me "would you do us to begin?" The dear, I said to myself, beaming down on him. Here one of the third generation that I had known, was going to defer to the opinion of his grand-father. I had seen the dawn of a new day for our women kind. "In the sunlight here below the kitchen windows" I answered brightly, remembering how good it was for small Jamie to have the sun shining on his face. "I could have the two within sight, the older and younger. I like to come to a window or doorway to watch them. Jamie perhaps shedding his jacket and trousers became more demanding, eyes alight with interest, cheeks red from his exertions, hands busy, imitating James and already learning from him to do any chore well. Presently I saw the dear, and the women were concerned Jamie was a chip off the old block. "No," he replied solemnly "we can't begin there. You see we've already put the first load of clay around at the other side of the house."

The fact that only one round-mouthed shovel was in repair gave moments of concern to the two. For as Jamie said: "There's no work being done on the side with a square shovel — I've tried it." And once in a short discussion over the question of rights of use, and quite in accord with the times Jamie washed his hands and left a desolate but nonetheless resolute grand-parent to pile up the lane alone.
