THE MORNING GUARDIAN

SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1904.

"LEST WE FORGET."

Not to nitred bishop or robed priest but to Rudyard Kipling, the rugged singer of sea songs and writer of plain tales came the word. Not from the solemn cathedral, in the dim religious light, down the long-drawn aisle, pealed forth the great Recessional Hymn. A London newspaper flung it out upon the murky air of the great city. The wings of the morning caught it up and carried it to the ends of the earth and to the uttermost parts of the sea.

Why was it that the message was so mighty, that with a voice as of thunder and of many waters, it smote upon the hearts of men? Because of the great occasion on which it was spoken, and because there is and has been among men a tendency to accept the gift and forget the Giver; to forget our own national and individual faults and failings; to become self-sufficient in our own estimation; to say, "My power and the might of mine own hand hath gotten me this wealth, this glorious heritage, the liberty, the advantages I possess," and to forget Him from whom all blessings flow, and in whose hand is all our breath.

We, as a people are here, we know not how or why. But was there not a guiding hand that led the Loyalists northward into the forest solitudes, the emigrant westward over stormy seas toward the setting sun? We have a vast and goodly heritage, better than that which Moses described to his people: "a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley and delicious fruits; where we have eaten bread without scarceness; where herds and flocks, silver and gold and all that we have has been multiplied."

A thousand leagues from sea to sea it spreads; glowing with bloom and verdure beneath the life-giving warmth and and light of the sun in the springtime; watered with the dew and showers from above in our pleasant summer; yellow with rich fruitage when the autumn breezes toss the ocean-like expanse of our harvest fields into golden billows on plain and prairie; shining bright beneath the sun and stars when draped with the pure white mantle dropped from Heaven upon it in our frosty but kindly winter. A fitting home for noble and Godlike men, this grand and beautiful possession has been given to us as a sacred trust. Such a trust enjoins high ideals and lofty aims for the statesman and the citizen alike.

It was not human wisdom or the hand of man that upheaved the Canadian mountains, hollowed the great valleys and spread the fertile plains; that stored the coal, the iron and the gold beneath our soil; that bade the mighty rivers flow, the flowers to bloom in June and the maples to flame in October—each tree a veritable burning bush, silent yet eloquent. It was not of our ordering, or of our wisdom or strength that peace has reigned in the days of our fathers and our own, so that our oldest cannot remember of conqueror or foreign foe, of war or battle sound within our borders. These are the gifts of Him beneath whose awful hand we hold dominion from sea to sea.

It may be said that we as a people are not drunk with slight of military or naval power. We have few fortresses; we have no battleships. Our besetting sin may not be an over-trust "in reeking tube and iron shard". But is there not in our midst inordinate greed for wealth; the bloated millionaire distiller grown fat and the army of publicans sustained at the price of desolated homes? Are there not drunkenness in high places, and Belshazzar feasts, in the midst of which may yet come an ominous handwriting upon the wall? Is there not need of a trumpet call for a rally of moral forces, even in our own fair island, to put down lawlessness and violence; to hold with fearless unyielding hand the citadel of prohibition.

If we permit our political life to become corrupted at its source by party, with a thousand dirty hands scattering ten thousand bribes around the God-given ballot box; if the young Samson of the North shall lay his head in Delilah's lap, and give up the secret of his strength while corruption prepares the bonds for his giant limbs, then as sure destiny we will yet hear the alarm, "The Philistines be upon thee, Samson," and we shall meet them to our cost. It is our fault, our very great fault that sore evils exist, great dangers to, within our gates. We have need in this time of our wealth, to take thought of our ways; "to keep the soldier firm the statesman pure," and reverently to pray—

Judge of the nations, spare us yet, Lest we forget, lest we forget.
