WILD HORSES
By Henry Herbert Knibbs

Lopez sat huddled up, watching Johnny with admiration and envy. The Mexican's little blood-hot eyes beamed with an intensity of feeling that made him forget his every; he saved the fight, would not let any one of the order was soother killed or subdued, and neither seemed to know what it meant to quit. The stallion went into the air again, bunched his feet, and hit the ground like a fall.

Thyroid Gland of Bandit Saves Girl

LILLE, France, April 12.—Denise L., a three-year-old girl, suffering from a fortnight ago from infantile paralysis is recovering rapidly as a result of an operation which transferred to her the thyroid gland of the notorious bandit Olivier, who was then guillotined.

The child is playing merrily with her dolls, has lost her listlessness, and will soon be able to leave the hospital. The operation was pronounced a most important contribution to the future of therapeutic medicine.

The Dennistoun Case

The Most Famous Matrimonial Case Since Charles II's Time.

St. Louis Falls, S. Dak.—James A. May, of 4063 E. Street, has perfected an amazing new device that cuts down gas consumption in a proportion, removes all carbon, prevents spark trouble and overheating. Many cars have made 49 miles on a gallon.

Anyone can install it in 15 minutes. Mr. May wants agents, and is offering to send one free to one auto owner in each locality. Write him today.

THE DEFENDANT'S SECOND MARRIAGE (Continued)

Mrs. Dennistoun had made great friends with Lord and Lady Carnarvon, who were very kind to her. She practically lived with them, and went to Egypt with them and their guest in 1922, in October, 1921, Lady Carnarvon was going to Paris, and at the request of the plaintiff, Colonel Dennistoun took certain belongings of the plaintiff to Lady Carnarvon at her hotel. That said Colonel Dennistoun's acquaintance with the defendant and Lady Carnarvon which developed into friendship from friendship, love, and, after Lord Carnarvon's death, into marriage.

On July 21, 1922, Colonel Dennistoun and his wife were in a motor car and hoof square-set to ground. A group of young muskies that were playing to the racing strip. No moral at all, but it was a very nice thing to see. I gave me that horse to ride."

The two huge trunks had been taken down stairs to the veranda. Grace Percival came down from her room attired in a smart travelling gown. She was grieved and wore a veil. Seated in the big chair at the end of the veranda she waited for the stage which, she had been told, was to leave in an hour later. The car was waiting in some necessity for repairs. Early that morning she had received a telegram, returned from Antiope, stating that her guardian, Samuel Percival, had been seriously injured in an automobile accident, and that his recovery was doubtful. The messenger implied further that her presence in Chicago was advisable in order that she might look after her interests in case Percival succumbed to his injuries. The message contained no details as to the nature of the accident, but Percival's secretary, Mrs. Grace Percival, was too well aware of her guardian's habits to be altogether surprised by the news. He was noted as a reckless driver when upon occasion, his wheel was gradually relinquished to Grace Percival, who herself to doubt the veracity of the message, and that was because she had recently advised her guardian, by letter, that her stay in Arizona was indefinite, for Percival had argued that she was in the first place, a woman, and that it was a whim which she would regret. In a year she would become mistress of her own fortune. He had so long been a member of the firm and had controlled the policy of the firm, that she had an idea of losing even partial control of the finances was distasteful to him. Grace Percival had been far from flattered by his reiterated proposals of marriage, resenting his reason for it almost as much as his reason for it.

However, it was the coincidence of her own desire to leave Arizona, and the receipt of the telegram impugning her to come home, which troubled her. She tried to believe that it was mere chance, but she decided to return to Chicago with nothing to do with the news of Percival's accident. Alone much of the time since Johnny Trent had left Solano, and free from the anticipation of seeing him daily, she took time to reflect, and decided that her romance with the young cowboy was a word mistake which she did not altogether regret, yet realized fully. And it was because she cared for him that she determined to leave, as the quickest and simplest solution of the difficulty. While she had been momentarily sincere when with him, she felt that it was utterly unfair even to intimate, by a longer sojourn in Solano, that their companionship could become more than it was. He would be left, angry, and would hardly forgive her. Yet that would be better than a pretense on her part, that she cared enough for him to marry him. She had lived upon his enthusiasms, his virile personality. She saw the land as he saw it, a spacious and wonderful empire of range and mesa of sunlight and clean air, and vistas limitless and alluring. To Johnny Trent it was home. To her it was a magnificent picture, an experience, an adventure. But to live in the picture all her days, to become a part of it, to be loyal to her decision and to Johnny Trent—that, she dared not believe, was possible. The habit of wealth subdued and smothered her actual self. And, paradoxically, she was more her actual self, when she decided never to see him again, that when she had begged him to come back to her that night when he had left for the hills. But Johnny would not understand; yet the telegram was an uncontrollable reason for her leaving.

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY

A. D. 1100. Within three hours of the death of his brother, Henry was in Winchester and in possession of the Royal Treasury. His headlong gallop from Malmesbury was followed by William de Breteuil, treasurer of Rufus, who divined his purpose. Henry, by force and persuasion got the keys from him; the rest was easy, and Henry was crowned at Westminster. Under the treaty between William and Robert of Normandy, Henry was to be the younger brother, was an orphan. But Robert was shuffling to Italy on his return from Palestine.

GENERAL X REVEALED

On the second day of the hearing, Mr. Justice McCardle, addressing Sir Edward Marshall Hall, said: "I am not satisfied that the name of the general should be withheld. The general is dead, but many members of the public may not appreciate that fact and suspicion may fall on those who are associated with the case."

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—The general is dead, I had hoped that we might have been able to keep his name out, but if your Lordship thinks that it might bring suspicion on others I regret the necessity, but I recognize that it is unavoidable.

Mr. Justice McCardle.—Then we will ask Mrs. Dennistoun. Addressing the plaintiff, who had gone in to the witness-box, his Lordship said: "You lived at a hotel in Paris, you told us yesterday, with a general whom we called 'X'. Who was it?"

Mrs. Dennistoun.—General Sir John Cowans.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—Your Lordship remembers that he was called during the entire of the Forfeiture proceedings, and that the attention of the witness was drawn to certain items in the statement of claim. She said that she had paid various sums of money on behalf of her husband to the amount of £136 18s. 4d., in January 1920 to a tailor and a draper, and that she had paid in the same month £100 to White's Club. The £100 was paid in notes. She produced the receipt. During 1920 and 1921 she advanced to her husband various other sums amounting to £436.

Mr. Justice McCardle.—Did Sir John Cowans make you an allowance? No, he helped me in the house, but he gave me no allowance of any kind.

How did you live?—I had some money from my husband. Every month he gave me part of his pay until his appointment as general. It was in 1920, everything became very much harder. I had a little money of my own.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—How much of your own?—About £200 a year. I lost £500 of that owing to the interest on the £400 loan which I had got for my husband. Asked further about Sir John Cowans, Mrs. Dennistoun said that there was no definite arrangement between them about an allowance. She had nothing that she could rely on.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—Did he bear the expenses of the flat?—After 1920, yes. He helped me considerably more.

Did your affection for the general increase?—I was devoted to him. He was a very charming man and a wonderful personality.

Referring to the letter in which her husband said, "It is me who hurt you, not you who hurt me," Mrs. Dennistoun said that Colonel Dennistoun was taking the blame for all that had happened.

LORD AND LADY CARNARVON.

Mrs. Dennistoun said that she first met Lady Carnarvon in 1920. Both Lord and Lady Carnarvon were "most wonderfully kind" to her, and she made their London house her home for two years. She looked on Lady Carnarvon as her greatest friend and trusted her as such. Late in 1921 she wrote and asked her husband to take some day to Paris and hand carry to Lady Carnarvon to be brought home to her (the witness). That was how Colonel Dennistoun first met Lady Carnarvon.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—Did you leave the Carnarvons in February, 1923?—Yes.

Why did you leave?—It was difficult during the last few months. I had told Lady Carnarvon in November that I could not trespass on her hospitality any longer. My flat, which had been let for two years, was to become free in May, 1923.

Did you know that a friendship had grown up between your husband and Lady Carnarvon?—I naturally knew.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—During 1922 over £12,700 was paid into Colonel Dennistoun's account. At the time when he wrote the letter he had a balance of £3,600.

Sir Edward Marshall Hall.—Very large sums were paid into the account under certain conditions which we shall detail to your Lordship.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—Were you at that time so "hard up" that you gave your pearls to Lady Carnarvon to sell for you?—I probably had been extravagant and had bought some clothes which I could not afford, and so I asked Lady Carnarvon to sell my pearls. She very kindly did so for me. Did your husband write and tell you that you need not go to the length of selling your pearls as he had thousands in the bank?—No, you know that he had this sum—No.

Mrs. Dennistoun said that in September, 1923, she was very chaste; she made the excuse for allegations against her in regard to six or seven different men.

She said that she had been advised by her counsel to make a statement.
