The Girl Who Had No Chance

THE REAL MYRA

Chapter 105

There was a sudden silence in the room, a silence so intense that Ruth felt the blood rushing to her face and fancied she heard it beating in her ears. She wondered whether she had heard correctly.

"I came to say she needn't have lied to me over the phone last night."

Those were Myra's words—she had not misunderstood. She looked at Myra, white-faced, suddenly afraid, afraid as though she had indeed done something wrong.

"I—I—what did you say?" Ruth managed at last.

Myra, having delivered her blow, settled back into the corner of the couch to watch its effect. Her gray eyes had suddenly lost their shallow, pleasant look. They were concentrated, intent.

Strange to say, Myra's face had more expression in this nasty mood than in her usual complacent one. A little smile—a smirk, Gaby called it later—played around her lips.

"You heard what I said," she answered, impudently.

Ruth was left perfectly helpless. All her instinct was to justify herself, to come to her own defence.

How did Myra know Tim was there? Had Tim told her—but that was unbelievable. Had she heard his voice while Ruth had the phone open—but he had not spoken, he merely shook his head violently when he knew Myra was asking about him.

Or was Myra bluffing? And was she simply saying this to watch its effect on Ruth? In that case, she had confirmation of her suspicions, for Ruth was too honest to disguise her feelings, or to dissemble, and she knew it. If Myra had said that merely to find out something she wanted to know, she possessed her answer from Ruth's face—and the girl knew it.

Gaby took hold of the situation suddenly. Not a flicker of expression had gone over her face when Myra spoke. She leaned back too, her hand under her chin, watching Myra.

"Oh, I say," she said putting a slightly contemptuous drawl into her voice, "he is rather a strong word, my dear girl. Just what do you mean by what you said?"

"All right, I'll tell you what I mean," Myra threw her head back and looked defiantly at Gaby. "Last night I—I had a message for Tim. So I called him up here—"

"How did you know he was here?" Gaby put in.

"Never mind, I knew. Ruth answered her voice was awful funny. I knew right enough he was here from the way she spoke. And I asked her—I wanted to call her up anyway about something else—and she said he wasn't. I knew it was a lie, but I thought I'd come down and see her today, and just tell her so."

"That's the second or third time you've used a word not ordinarily accepted in polite society," Gaby said, assuming a very magnificent air.

"A lie's a lie." "Really! How very oddly you put things!" Gaby was in her element now. She had just enough drawl in her voice to make her manner to Myra quite superior, yet not enough to seem too artificial.

"Do!" Myra was growing angry, and when she grew angry, she was apt to become a little loud.

This seemed to be what Gaby wanted. Ruth saw her eyes sparkle she was still in her impish mood and she was evidently going to taunt this other girl until she made her completely lose her temper and so had her completely weakened.

"You do, you know. You always have. Only you used to keep your temper rather better when I knew you some years ago. But after all, my dear girl, aren't you being a little—shall we say tactless—to, your hostess?"

"You needn't put on airs with me," Myra said shrilling, having lost her self-control entirely. "I don't care if you are making a couple of hundred a week, and Tim's only making forty. You weren't anything but a chorus girl when I knew you, and you couldn't have held a job ever if you hadn't good looking—"

"My dear child, I never boasted of my intellectual attainments," Gaby had her drawl quite perfect by this time. "I draw a fair salary because I look well in atrociously short skirts and have a fairly decent voice. That seems besides the question. But why did you come here to insult your oldest friend—particularly after the way you treated that friend some years ago?"

"I never treated her any way. I couldn't help it if Tim fell in love with me. He never was in love with her anyway!" He told me so.

To Ruth the silence that followed this fairly throbbing—probably because she could hear the blood beating through her ears. It made her a little dizzy. But Gaby still had the situation in her hands. Ruth was quite incapable of handling it. And Gaby did the best thing possible. She sat perfectly still, letting the silence go on and on. Ruth, her tea forgotten, sat in her chair, Myra leaned back defiantly in the corner of the couch. And the third, the little actress, never lost her impersonal attitude. She too leaned back against the couch, her chin in her hand, looking at Myra as though she were a curious and strange little being, something to be studied.

The silence drew out. Even Myra felt it, for the red ran into her cheeks and she dropped her eyes.

AIRPLANES AT $500.00 FOR BRITISH AMATEURS

TORONTO May 30.—Airplane flying promises to become as popular in England as bicycling or motoring. British manufacturers are now perfecting light models of aircraft that will cost little more than a motorcycle. They are fitted with small engines of four horse-power and have a speed of 50 miles an hour. They leave the ground with a few yards run and land at less than 25 miles an hour. The dangers are less formidable than those of the big flying machines, and anyone with a rudimentary knowledge of mechanics can handle the new models.

In an effort further to popularize flying, the British under secretary of State for Air has offered a prize of $2,500 for a light airplane competition confined to British machines with a maximum of 8 horsepower. The cost of the airplane when completed is not to exceed $500. A commendable condition is ability for the machine to be transported a mile by two persons within three hours, the test to include getting out a field through the ordinary field gate and traveling along an average country road. The competition is to take place in September over a triangular course of not less than 15 miles, and as the minimum distance which must be flown on the one golygon

Good Advice to Labrador Gold Seekers and Others

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell the famous medical missionary says. The Labrador gold seeker must take brown flour instead of white to ward off the diseases which affects the natives it is called BERI-BERI.

BERI-BERI is a dreaded disease directly traceable to a lack of vitamins and mineral salts and many more of the modern civilized life are largely traceable to a deficiency of these all-important health building elements. The people of Charlottetown may not contract BERI-BERI by eating white flour but there is no doubt that FLAVO WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR as made by us is very nourishing and healthful and if such an eminent authority as Dr Grenfell recommends it for the hard working and neglected prospectors, what will it do for the average citizen.

Ask your grocer for FLAVO WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR but if you buy your bread ask for STEWART'S Or McInnis's WHOLE WHEAT LOAF they both use FLAVO WHEAT FLOUR. AND IT IS EXCELLENT.
