BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

What one may do, why not another?
Can right be wrong somehow or other?
—Peter Rabbit.
"I think it is dreadful the way some animals and birds hunt and kill others," declared the mother of Farmer Brown's boy.
"Now what is it? Has Black Pussy caught another bird?" asked Tommy.
"No," replied Mother Brown. "If he had, I could do something about it."
"What could you do?" Tommy wanted to know.
"I could punish him," declared Mother Brown. "I would, too," she added.
"Which wouldn't be fair. It wouldn't be just to Black Pussy," said Tommy.
"Why not?" asked Mother
Brown.
"Because Mother Nature made him an eater of meat, and the urge to hunt for it," replied Tommy.
"But if it wasn't Black Pussy, who was it who has upset you?"
"It is that little scamp, Striped Chipmunk," replied Mother Brown.
"I heard the birds in the Orchard making a great fuss, creaking and scolding, so I went

Contract Bridge

SKILL, PLUS LUCK, PLUS THE ENEMY'S HELP
The slam contract in today's deal requires some good luck, as well as expert handling.

North's jump from four diamonds to five notrump was questionable, despite his four-plus honor-tricks. The fact that his opening diamond bid was of the "compensated" variety, and based on only a four-card suit, at that, should have acted as a deterrent.
West led the spade jack, and South carefully won the trick in dummy, thus preserving the spade ace as a vital entry to his own hand. East, with a regrettable lack of discretion, discarded the club jack—a blatant announcement which declared duly noted!
South cashed the four diamonds, discarding a heart from his own hand, while West let go two spades. The club ace was then laid down, and the club seven led.
East put up the king and confidently returned the club ten.
When South won East's club return with the queen, West had to give up a heart so as to keep his spade protection. Thereupon, dummy discarded a low spade. Now, having prevented West from guarding the heart suit, South turned his attention to East. The spade eight was led by the king and dummy's last spade was returned to the ace. That was too much for East! Forced to hold the high club against South's club six, East had to give up his heart stopper, and the last three tricks went to the ace, king and seven of hearts.
Remarkably enough, if East had not played the king on the club seven, he would have destroyed the timing of South's double squeeze!
Try it!
