

FRIDAY,

Lonely Parade

By Fannie Hurst

The time had come at last, gradually, when by way of connective tissue, achieved by way of Elsie, she was beginning to reap. At last, subtly, she was becoming almost indispensable to Elsie; part of her daily pattern. Not because of Elsie's impulse to give a smart girl a leg up, but because it was becoming more and more convenient to have Kitty present at dinners, house parties, functions of this and that nature, where the Mullane personality and originality were invaluable.

It was highly desirable this minute to have Kitty as part of the kind of day that stretched before Elsie, a day which included a series of activities in which the Mullane judgment and advice, to say nothing of shrewdness and manner of procedure, were almost sure to prove important. You could, for instance, count on Anton, the hairdresser, to do a better coiffure if Kitty were along to direct the placing of the puffs behind the high pompadour. Elsie's compensation was to treat Kitty to a hairdresser. It was nice to have Kitty along.

It was nice to have Kitty along while she shopped for provender. How she knew where to go and how to handle the tradesfolk! Trust Kitty to track down the best places in town for whitebait for Tommy's Sunday morning breakfast parties, trust Kitty to track down that Brooklyn confectioner who bakes the birthday cakes with music boxes in them; and to know where to shop for commodities, from thumb tacks with Raphael cherubs for heads, to musical chairs, to a miracle of a laundress machine that reduced laundress bills by sixty per cent.

Who but Kitty could have done over the blue room with such taste and economy? Who was chattering, never or so easily on call to fill in at a function? Who but Kitty, for instance, could swing this matter of the Winged Victory with such efficiency and economy? Perhaps she expected her rake-off in the transaction; well, let her have it if she could shave things any finer after Elsie had seen to it that the whitening was not to come from the Tweed side of the negotiation. The Winged Victory loomed large in a day already crammed with the kind of inconsequential that kept Elsie a very busy woman.

"Let's see about the Winged Victory immediately after I've had my steam bath. Have one on me while you wait, Kitty."

"That's pretty of you, Elsie. Do you mind if I have a silver vapor instead? A silver vapor costs too much for me, so poor Kitty does without."

"You will get them down another two hundred on the sedan, won't you, Kitty?"

"I've sweated them terribly as it is, Elsie."

"Sweat them a little more. You've no idea how much less twenty-six hundred is going to sound to Tommy than twenty-eight hundred. His ear is made that way. Get this price down for me, Kit, and then I want to go into the matter of that gold and topaz necklace for Selly's birthday."

"I want terribly to do that necklace, Elsie, but I can't squeeze the turnip any drier. It's a wonderful Winged Victory buy at eighty-eight hundred and even that is a dead secret, which means someone at the selling end pays the difference between that and what goes on the books. Besides, I've a duck of an idea about the Victoria sedan, Elsie."

"Don't tell it to me until I have the car. I won't take it except at my price."

"Well, then, we'll use my idea on some other sedan at some other time."

"But I want the Victoria now!"

"Well, then, here's my idea. I don't see why, Elsie, the interior of a car shouldn't reflect the owner just as much as a room does. I've a plan for doing a Victoria, if not for you, then for someone else, a shiny bouclair color, but without the chintz. No reason why a car interior need give you the Pullman blues. I can see a flowered rose rep for you, Elsie. Warm in winter, cool in summer, a rose color with enough gray in it offsets dust."

"Darling idea!"

"Rose rep curtains, flower holders with primroses and a pink enameled wall vanity with a primrose design. We'll do the house at Cape May to match."

"Kitty, you're a genius. Kitty, you're a devil, tempting me. Kitty, what makes you think you're going to do the house at Cape May?"

"Lillian Russell's sedan is done in a kind of grey-blue that doesn't do a thing for her lovely skin. We'll make you as rosy as a baby in a bassinet."

"Let's select the color this afternoon, Kit!"

"Elsie, you talk as if poor Kitty didn't have a living to earn. Ladies with money" must eat, darling. In fact, three of us at twenty-one East must eat."

"Let that rich Miss Baldwin foot the bills. She's oozy with money."

"Yes, but we operate on a strictly one-third basis, and for such a high-minded reason. What Sierra has over and above income, she gives away to the poor. It's a religion with the Charlottetown that we operate on an one-third basis."

"Stay on with me, Kitty, and make that big handsome fellow at the Winged Victory give you a commission on the sedan he is going to let me have for twenty-six hundred. After all, you brought him a customer."

"Why, Elsie, he can't let it go that close and make sufficient company would permit, to buy postage stamps for his wife. Besides, I wouldn't dream of—"

"Stuff and nonsense! Business is business. Of course it's never entered your head, but you're also entitled to a commission yourself. It doesn't cost me a penny that you should have it, and a businessman like Wayne would tell you you're entitled to it."

St. Paul's A. Y. P. A. News

The evening of the 12th was spent in canvassing for the Diocesan Times, and 35 subscriptions were received. On their return to the Parish Hall, the members enjoyed a sing song, and the meeting closed with Auld Lang Syne and the Benediction.

On October 16th, Youth Sunday, 22 members attended Corporate Communion in the morning, and later enjoyed a delicious breakfast at the Charlottetown Hotel.

At the Evening Service, the A. Y. P. A. members sat together at the front of the Church. David Wood and Graham Jenkins read the lesson; and Jim Tibbott, Don Naus, John Spencer and George Anderson were sidemen. The Girls' Choir sang very sweetly as their anthem, for Rev. J. P. Tibbott, preached an inspiring sermon on the A. Y. P. A. theme for this year, "Let Your Light Shine."

Following Service, Mr. and Mrs. Tibbott invited the members to an "At Home" at the Rectory, where they were also joined by St. Peter's A. Y. P. A. Films, a hymn sing song, and delicious refreshments made for a delightful evening. A vote of thanks tendered Mr. and Mrs. Tibbott for their kindness in inviting the AYers to the Rectory.

Following Bowling on the 19th, the members returned to the Hall for refreshments. A White Elephant Sale which provided much fun and laughter for all was held with Jim Tibbott and Wendall MacKenzie as auctioneers. The Devotional Period opened with the hymn "Stand up, Stand up for Jesus, followed by the A. Y. P. A. Prayer. Recreation was under the direction of Mollie Lewis, and the meeting closed with Auld Lang Syne and the Benediction.

Aylmer Catsup

... makes meats and vegetables so tasty

A pure catsup, like Aylmer, is wholesome eating for the children, say nutritionists. For Aylmer makes it "home-style" — from Canada's finest, ripest tomatoes. Children love its "true tomato flavor" and need Vitamin C.
