COMMENT ON WOMEN JOURNALISTS

LONDON, Aug. 20. (By the Canadian Press)—The Standard contains an article by J. Freestly, on his Canadian tour, which he evidently highly enjoyed. Two sentences are devoted to Winnipeg. "At Winnipeg I had to have tea with a whole crowd of women journalists. There seems to be thousands and thousands of women journalists in Canada and all as lively as crickets."

ENGLISH LADY DETAINED IN RUSSIA

LONDON, Aug. 21. (By the Canadian Press)—In the House of Commons Captain Bowyer, member for Buckingham, drew attention to an appeal by an Englishman whose wife is detained in Russia. The Englishman, Mr. Walford, married the lady on February 8, in Odessa, and he at once applied to the Soviet Government for permission for her to leave Russia which was refused three weeks later. On May 22 he decided to leave Moscow, and on his arrival in London went to the Foreign Office and explained the whole position to one of the officials. He also communicated with him (Sir G. Bowyer) and afterwards went to the Foreign Office at intervals of about a week, and was assured that the matter would be taken up with the Russian Ambassador, but with no result. The speaker then took up the matter but got a very unsympathetic reply from the Foreign Office, and there was considerable delay, and this lady was still in Russia. He argued that energetic steps should have been taken to obtain her release.

Mr. Dalton (Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs) replying, said Mr. Walford, who was in the employ at one time of the Indo-European Telegraph Company in the Soviet Union, like a number of other Englishmen who had resided in Russia, elected to marry a Russian lady. This lady was a Russian citizen, and although she had married an Englishman she was still a Soviet citizen. She was what lawyers called a "dual"—that was to say, she had a dual nationality. She was a Soviet citizen by reason of having been born in the Soviet Union, a British citizen by reason of having married an Englishman.

MAKING EDUCATION PRACTICABLE

LONDON, Aug. 20. (By the Canadian Press)—Mrs. Beatrice Ensor, chairman of the New Education Fellowship, presided at the British Commonwealth Education Conference at Bedford College for Women, Regent's Park, London. Opening a discussion on examinations and tests, Mrs. Ensor said that during the last few years quite a lot had been done in trying to discover how to alter examinations and tests in order to make them more workable and practicable.

Professor Burt, Professor of Education, University of London, said that, generally speaking, examiners were extremely vague about the aims which they had in view. No two examiners ever worked a candidate in the same way. "For example, collect thirty essays from your class," said Professor Burt, "and hand them round your teaching colleagues to be marked. You will be astonished at the discrepancies in the marking. I did this once, and the essay which was marked down as the best by another."

Eugenie Started Something When She Wore Those Hats

Empress New What She Wanted, And Did Many Other Things.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—Now that it is definitely decided that women are going to stick to those hats that cover only half the head and tilt down over the nose, it becomes necessary to investigate the lady who started this fashion.

She probably didn't realize while galloping through the Fontainebleau Woods in the retinue of Napoleon III that her hats and gowns would adorn the Parisian boulevards nearly eight decades later and consequently spread to all points of the globe.

And if modern women adopt Eugenie's code of conduct as well as her hats the world is going to become a tumultuous place.

When Eugenie left Madrid and went to Paris to charm the wild eye of the stiff dresses and cumbersome hats in which the ladies of the court danced and rode horseback.

She was a young lady who knew what she wanted. Before you could say "second empire" she designed the type of hat for which you husbands and fathers will be getting bills Sept. 1.

She had a few ideas about dresses, too, and after she married Napoleon all the ladies of the empire suddenly became aware of how really exquisite the Queen's taste in clothing had become.

That started a vogue, and the end is not yet, as you can readily see by walking down the street any sunny afternoon.

Historical Support Falls. Now, the Empress' hats and gowns somehow lend the impression that she was a prim, demure young thing; but history fails to justify such an assumption. Painful as it is to say so, the Empress was quite the life of the party in old Madrid. History chronicles the fact that she was killed at the age of 15 by the Duke of Alba, a fickle fellow, who then married Eugenie's sister, Francesca.

The future Empress had no ideas as to how a broken horse should be mended. She bought a horse and proceeded to gallop through the streets of Madrid shouting the Castilian equivalent of "Whoopee!" A fuming black cinder clinked between her teeth, lent a dimmed filly to her midnight rides.

Biographers whisper that Eugenie looked on the wine when it was red, and yellow, too. She acquired a small, sharp dagger and kept it handy in a constant state of readiness for fear she would get them a playful dig in the ribs. She frequented the bill fights of which ladies were supposed to have no second-hand knowledge and tossed gifts to the most handsome toradors. There were reports of our rageous evening strolls with a handsome page boy.

In the midst of this Eugenie decided to enter a convent. She was black-balled—unanimously.

There was nothing much left to do, she reasoned, except to go to Paris and marry Napoleon. It took her three months to put that across and one of the first persons to receive a wedding announcement was the Duke of Alba.

Eugenie died in 1920, quite calmly everything considered, without the least hint that her styles would be the rage of 1931.
