Photographic Introduction.
Many years ago, when tintypes first came into general use, the booth where pictures were made "while you wait" was the center of a large crowd at every county fair and popular resort. An old-time photographer tells an experience he had long ago, before the secrets of the camera were known to everybody.
He had set up a tent at a county fair, and was trying to drum trade. He stood outside his tent, calling in true hawker fashion the merits of his pictures. The people who gathered around were interested and curious, but somewhat in awe of the little black box inside the tent. Finally the photographer thought he might set the sheep to running by singling out one of the crowd and taking his picture free. Standing near each other were a young man and a young woman. Thinking that they would like to be taken together, and that the two would have more courage to face the camera than a lone victim, the photographer called out:
"That gentleman right there and that lady, come inside and I'll give you pictures in two minutes, free of charge!"
The two looked at each other, grinned, and finally came inside the tent.
"Stand right there," said the photographer. "That's it. Now hold still a minute. There you are. Now wait till I finish 'em up."
In a few minutes he handed them each a tintype in a pink paper frame. They looked at the pictures curiously. When the young woman blushed and her companion grinned and tittered.
"Like 'em?" asked the photographer, briskly, making of possible customers in the crowd outside.
"Waal," said the man, slowly, "it looks like her, and I guess it looks like me, but ye see, I didn't know and I guess she didn't know we was goin' to be in the same picture."
"Thought you'd like 'em that way," answered the photographer. "Pleasant souvenir of your visit to the fair together."
"Waal, yes, but you see we didn't come together. I never seen her before."
Then the two snickered, and the photographer bowed them out as quickly as he could.
That year he did a good business, and at the next fair he set up his booth again. One day a young couple came in and greeted him with smiles of doubtful recognition. It was the young man and woman of the year before.
"How do you do?" cried the photographer. "I see you know each other now."
"Yes," answered the man, looking sheepishly at the girl. "My folks know some folks of hers over to Hopkins, and when they seen her picture they recognized it. An' that's how we got acquainted."
"I'm very glad," said the photographer.
"So'm I; ain't you, Lizzie?"
"Yes," said Lizzie, shyly.

Kismet.
Two men lived together: one was timid, the other bold. Said the timid one: "Really, life grows more and more dangerous. To-day it is an explosion, tomorrow a fire, the third day a hurricane. One dare not travel on a train for fear of collisions, nor is it safe to go afoot for fear of motor cars. I am going to give up going outdoors."
But his friend said: "How differently are we constituted! You are in love with life and fear danger. Now, I do not fear peril of any kind, and as for life, it is not worth a rush to me. In fact, I made up my mind this morning that I would go over Niagara Falls in a barrel."
At this the other shuddered and said: "But you will go to certain death."
"And if I do I but follow the example of all who have preceded me since Adam. This certain death is almost as old as the hills. Farewell. I go to order my barrel."
When the venturesome one had gone the timid one prepared for his life indoors. He made fast the doors and caused sheeting of tin to be put over the windows so that no sudden explosion could break the glass and kill him in his room. This left him without light, but he did not dare use a candle or a lamp for fear an earthquake might upset it. Life in the dark was not altogether a joy, but he had the company of his thoughts and they were pleasant, for he had not always been so timid. After a few hours he became accustomed to the half-light and was able to prepare his meals. Every day fruit and milk and bread were let down his chimney.
Meanwhile the venturesome one ordered his barrel, and when it was made he went to Niagara and paid an idiot one dollar to roll him into the river. And after he had packed himself in he glanced at the sky and the earth and the water with a suspicion of regret, and then in a firm voice he bade the idiot put on the cover and roll him in. And the idiot did as he was asked and went into town to spend his dollar.
And over the Falls of Niagara went the barrel, and a few minutes later, still intact, it floated into a cove and the venturesome one broke his way out, somewhat jarred but able to be about.
The passage of the Falls had given him a certain joy in life, and it was with altogether different feelings that he returned to his home. No one but he knew of his deed, but he did not care for that. If he had died that would have been the end. Now that he lived he would be able to show his friend the world was not necessarily the home of death.
He was amazed to find the house cleaned up and locked, and when his knocks on the front door brought no response, he called to the timid one that he was no burglar, but his friend, safe home from his passage of the Falls of Niagara.
"Come, let me in and I shall tell you what my feelings were as I went over."
But there was no response, so at last he put his shoulder to the front door and stove it in.
And he found that his timid friend had choked to death on a crust of bread.—Charles Battell Loomis.

Mistress—Now, Bridget, how often have I cautioned you against breaking the ninth commandment? Bridget—In-laws, an' I guess it must 'a' been the cat done it.—Smart Set.

A Weather-Man's Invention.
Partly, no doubt, in recognition of the obduracy of climate, Professor Moore, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, has invented and patented a cold-air stove, of which the newspapers give descriptions. Being charged once a day with some sort of composition, the stove works automatically. The air inside of it getting cold, sinks and passes out through a pipe in the bottom. Warmer air runs in at the top, and so a current of air keeps running through the machine. The air comes out at a temperature of about 36 degrees. The warmer the room, the faster the machine works. It will reduce the temperature of a room to about 64 degrees. If the room is cooler than that there is no current, and the stove doesn't work. Besides cooling the air, it takes the dust out of it, and delivers it not only chilled, but clean. A stove twelve feet high turns out 125 feet of cold air a minute, which is enough to cool a hospital ward.
The inventor thinks his stove will be of great use to hospitals, which find serious difficulty in keeping sick patients comfortable in hot weather. No doubt, too, if it turns out well, it may be used in office buildings, and possibly in hotels and restaurants. It is possible that it may prove more satisfactory than the fans which are used so much, and, if so, there are commercial prospects for it.

Nervous Prostration.
A Common Trouble at This Time
Trying 'Season—An Example of How This Ailment is Cured by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

The first indication of nervous exhaustion and prostration is a tendency to neglect your daily work and to lose interest in the affairs of every-day life. Nerve force is becoming exhausted, and it seems too much trouble to concentrate the mind and to set about the task before you. When you feel your energy and ambition waning it is time to take action to restore wasting vitality. The evidence of many of the most reliable people in Canada points to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as the most effective means of restoring exhausted nerves.
Mrs. Willis Taylor, Hensley Street, Charlottetown, P. E. I., states:—"I suffered from nervous prostration, could not sleep and frequently had attacks of nervous headache, in fact, my whole system was run down and my health was in anything but a satisfactory condition. Since having used three boxes of Chase's Nerve Food I can say that I never tried any medicine that did me so much good. It has built up my system, strengthened the nerves, and enable me to sleep and rest well. It is now a considerable time since I had a headache, and I can truthfully recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a splendid preparation."
