CROSSED BAFFIN LAND DURING EXPLORATIONS

J. D. Soper, Government Explorer, is First White Man to Cross Baffinland and Return Alive—Brought Back Thousands of Specimens on Return From Three Years in the North.

(Canadian Press) OTTAWA, Oct. 22. — Rich in experience, as well as in botanical and geographical specimens, was J. Dewey Soper, explorer and naturalist of the department of mines, when he returned recently from three years of exploration in Baffin Land, with the record of being the first white man to cross Baffin Land and return alive. In addition to this record feat, which covered a route of about 400 miles and which took weeks as Mr. Soper surveyed as he went, he returned with literally thousands of specimens, botanical, geological, land animals, of sea animals, insects, birds and hundreds of hundreds of beautiful photographs, showing the natives, landscapes, mountains and general conditions in this far northern and little-known land. The crossing of Baffin Land which Mr. Soper made by dog team last winter, was accomplished after he had failed to make the same trip during the previous winter. He had on this trip four Eskimos. The only other white man to cross this territory was a German explorer, Hunsch, in 1912, and he died on the Western shores of Baffin Land after a most arduous crossing. Mr. Soper, who is a young man, a native of Preston, Ont., would not admit to an interviewer that he had undergone any particular danger during his three-year sojourn in Baffin Land, except the constant danger of being caught out in blizzards or of freezing to death in the sixty and seventy below zero weather, a common thing during the dark winter months. Mr. Soper left Quebec on the Canadian Government steamer Arctic in July, 1924, and was landed at Cumberland Gulf on July 22nd. In the winter of 1925-26 he accomplished his feat, crossed via the northern shore of Lake Nettling to the Fox channel and explored some miles northward up the coast. This last summer (1926) he journeyed via Lake Nettling and Lake Amadjuak to Amadjuak Bay on Hudson Strait, and then proceeded along the southern coast of Baffin Land to Cape Dorset. Returning to Amadjuak Bay he was picked up by the Nascoptic, Hudson Bay steamer, and taken to Burwell, at Cape Chidley, North Labrador, where he was later picked up by the Bay Dupert, a new steamer belonging to the Hudson Bay Company which took him to St. John's Newfoundland. The collection he brought back with him from Baffin Land includes some hundreds of birds, nearly 200 animals, including 30 seals, fresh water seals from Netsalls Lake, foxes of the arctic varieties, hares, caribou, lemmings; nearly 200 lots of insects, some fishes and some invertebrates over 300 geological and a large box of photo plates. In addition he brought back a large amount of ethnological material including Eskimo clothing of walrus and caribou skin, hunting implements, models of kayak and gear for the same, and a quantity of ancient archeological material from the interior of Baffin Land. Mr. Soper said that minerals do not seem at all plentiful in the Baffin Land. The whole country is devoid of trees, the ground being covered with mosses and grasses. An abundant wild flowers and shrubs in the summer time. The high mountains to the east are barren, covered with glaciers. The Eskimo population of Baffin Land Mr. Soper estimates at about 1,000. They live in permanent villages and skin tepees. They are not the type of Eskimo that build a permanent house of stone or wood. This type of Eskimo, considered by scientists to have higher culture than the present Eskimo in Baffin Land, was known as the Tunnet. Remains of his stone dwellings and many other relics were found by Mr. Soper. He brought back some specimens and photographs of remains which he estimates at about 1,500 years of age.

Beethoven Year Finds Music Status Similar

NEW YORK, Oct. 22. — Celebration of Beethoven's centenary finds music in a transitional period, as it was when the little German composer died.

When Beethoven lived, the romanticism of the nineteenth century formalism. It was in the combination of the newer romanticism with the beauty or form developed by the eighteenth century masters that he excelled.

To Revive His Works

The musical world will revive virtually all of his compositions this season in observance of the centenary. He wrote nine overtures, nine symphonies and thirty-eight piano sonatas. His principal vocal work is "Fidelio", an opera. Like Haydn and Mozart, Beethoven was of peasant birth. Finding his home intolerable on account of his father's intemperance and the early death of his mother, the erratic genius turned early to music, and published his first work in 1783.

Fits Of Temper

Fame attended the early works, especially in Vienna, where in 1793, he was received with great acclaim. But the eccentricities of the man were a constant worry to his friends. Dozens of incidents are told of his fitful bursts of temper that followed as an aftermath to the playing of some practical joke. One such incident concerns a Vienna woman who admired him so ardently that she was bent on having a lock of Beethoven's hair for her own. A friend of the composer suggested to him in a jocular spirit of hilarity, acquiesced, and sent her a lock of goat's hair, the color and course texture of which resembled his own. Later the woman heard of the joke and accused Beethoven of perpetrating it. His fury fell upon the friend who suggested the ruse. While he immediately cut off a lock of his own hair and sent it to his admirer, it is said that he never forgave his ingenious friend.

Never Could Teach

It was on account of his unstable disposition that he was never able to teach and thus pass to his pupils the power of his genius. Only one man, Rebs, studied directly under the master and can be said to have been his pupil.

During the latter years of his life, complete deafness overtook Beethoven, but the ability to compose was not dependent on auditory faculties, and it was after his hearing was quite gone that he composed Missa Solennis, one of the most famous works. At his death in 1826, it is said that 20,000 people attended the funeral.

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 23. — A photograph together with some lines of poetry, found by a German soldier in war-time on a Canadian soldier who was killed on May 3rd, 1917, near Arras, Northern France, France, has just been returned to the Canadian soldier's family through the medium of the Red Cross.

The story of its restoration is strange and interesting. In July the National Office of the Canadian Red Cross received the photograph from the International Red Cross Committee at Geneva, together with a letter stating that it had been received from a Dr. Klingemann of Dortmund-Wambel, Germany, who had expressed the hope that "the name and address inscribed on the poetry (Mrs. Thomas Goodrich, Melfort, Saskatchewan, Canada) would permit to locate the relatives of that dead soldier and to hand to them both the enclosures; which will certainly be for them of great value." The soldier upon whose body the photograph was found was late Private J. Oliver, Number 425170, 6th Brigade, Second Division Canadian Expeditionary Force. Since the stated date of that soldier's death, May 3rd, 1917, corresponds with the date of the battle of Fresnoy, captured by the First and Second Canadian Divisions on that day, it is probable he fell in that memorable action.

With a view to inquiry being made at Melfort, the National Office of the Canadian Red Cross lost no time in placing the matter in the hands of Mr. W. F. Kerr, Commissioner of the Red Cross Provincial Division of Saskatchewan. The only information obtainable was that relatives of the late Private Oliver might be found at Swan River, Manitoba. So the matter was then passed to Major J. W. Forbes, Commissioner of the Manitoba Red Cross Division who located the late Private Oliver's father at Big Woody Post Office near Swan River, a sister living on a farm at the same address and also found that Mrs. Thomas Goodrich the lady named on the photograph was a sister, now deceased. Acting upon this information the photograph was passed to Private Oliver's sister at Swan River. How the photograph came into the possession of Dr. Klingemann was not stated. However, the thought which prompted its return could not have been other than kindly and sympathetic and one from which all bitterness of the war had disappeared. Dr. Klingemann has been advised of the restoration of the photograph to the late soldier's family and of their gratitude for his thoughtful act.

Jerusalem Becoming Business Man' Town

JERUSALEM, Oct. 23. — In contrast to the disturbed and dismal conditions in Syria is the activity, prosperity and peace obtaining in Palestine. Jerusalem, formerly a city exclusively for pilgrims and tourists, is rapidly becoming a center for merchants and business men. Under the firm, just and impartial rule of the British, the Jews are rebuilding their Promised Land, making it, instead of a shrine where pilgrims adored holy ruins an dwelt in the gloomiest past, an up-to-date and enterprising country.

Jerusalem now consists of two cities, the old and the new. The new, sprung up within the last few years, consists of residential, shopping and business quarters, Jewish settlements, schools, churches, and large religious institutions. It is entirely modern. The old city, flanked on three sides by deep valleys, is made up of narrow, crooked streets, filled with loaded donkeys and camels and lined with romantic and historical buildings.

Miss Whitten Speaks On Child Labor

EDMONTON, Alta., Oct. 23. — Charlotte Whitten, speaking here on Child Labor problems, said: "In the question of child labor legislation and school attendance, the League of Nations under the peace treaty set certain international conventions for the protection of women and children. These conventions have not yet been ratified or approved by Canada, not because our standards are not as high as those set in the convention, for in some cases they are higher, but because the provinces have failed to come to a common agreement. With the aid of the Dominion department of labor, the council is trying to get the different provinces to fall into line so that we can have equal guarantee of freedom from child labor, and equal educational opportunities for children in all provinces and in both urban and rural schools." Illustrating the hardships which may arise from lack of uniformity, Miss Whitten pointed out that one province might have a very high standard while that of the adjacent province might be much lower. An industrial concern considering establishment, and not interested in the long vision, will locate in a province where it may employ children.

Dalhousie Freshettes Carry Baby Rattles

HALIFAX, N. S., Oct. 23. — While violent hazing was more or less passed out of popularity in Maritime universities, the custom of imposing various forms of restrictions or obligations upon the new students remains in vogue. As a result both sexes, appearing on the streets in strange and bizarre attire. In Halifax, home of Dalhousie University, which is affiliated Kings University, the "freshettes" as they term the first year girls, bowed to an edict from their seniors obliging them to wear bonnets and carry baby rattles whenever they appear on the public streets. The rattles to be dangled at the end of strings to ensure their appearance. The girls adhere strictly to the order and even the proud owners of wealthy duds and sporty roadsters never appear on the streets without their badges of scholastic humility.
