THE PEACE OF THE WORD.

The task of preserving peace among the nations is, it may be presumed, the chiefest of the cares with which statesmen are burdened. It seems that in no instance has a way been discovered of doing this more effectually than by being in a position to enforce obedience with a hand of iron. Consequently the world is burdened with the immense and expensive armies and navies which are such a drain upon the wealth of the powers that maintain them.

There may be reason for the mistrust of the German Kaiser which seems to prevail among the governments of the other powers of Europe. Certainly for years past the impression has been given that he is a disturbing element in the counsels of the men of the day.

Telegraphic despatches indicate that The London Times' correspondent at St. Petersburg has announced a projected alliance, which if it turn out to be true would mean peace for the world.

The Times' correspondent, while not endorsing this announcement, said it was true that negotiations were in progress between Russia on the one hand, and England and Japan on the other and that these negotiations were proceeding "very satisfactorily." In commenting editorially on the projected new "line up" of powers, The London Sun says:

"It is obvious that such an agreement would come near to offering a guarantee of worldwide peace. Such an agreement is probable, because England has already entered into an alliance with Japan and also at the same time has established an entente cordiale with Russia's ally, France. In other words, the elements are forthcoming of a combination, which would be irresistible at sea and would be possessed of financial resourses with which those of Germany, Austria and Italy, the members of the triple alliance, could not for a moment be compared.

"The existence of such a combination would compel the German empire to keep the peace, for it has given hostages to fortune in the form of its extensive ocean commerce and of its transmarine possessions.

"In eastern Asia, Japan and Russia would be relieved from the necessity of maintaining large military armaments for possible use against each other and the Anglo-Indian Empire would no longer have any reason to apprehend Russian aggression on its shores. In continental Europe the uneasiness of Belgium and the Netherlands would keep allayed and the danger of exterior attempts to promote the disintegration of the Hapsburg Dominions after the death of Francis Joseph would be minimized, for with all the powers wanting peace all would be interested in upholding the existing status of the dual monarchy.

"An agreement between Great Britain and Russia which practically would result in a quadruple combination, could have only a beneficial effect on the United States. Great Britain, Russia and France are all most friendly to the United States and it is inconceivable that Japan would enter on a contest against the wish of her three allies, Henceforth we could reply with confidence on the continuance of peace in the Pacific Ocean. China's retention of her territorial integrity might also be looked upon as assured, for Great Britain, Japan and the United States are all pledged to sustain it—and keeping in view the new international combination, neither Russia, France or Germany would again undertake to threaten it.

"Only in Constantinople would the new realignment of the great powers be regarded with misgiving. It is a matter of history that Islam is imperilled whenever the Christian powers unite, if measures were taken to safeguard Germany's interests in Asia Minor and to satisfy Austria's desire for Salonica, there is no reason why the coalition of Russia, France and England should not be followed by a partition of the Ottoman Empire. To the Sultan, Abdul Hamid, an association of the very nations which fought against each other in the Crimean war may well seem ominous. To all onlookers it is evident that nothing but a dissolution of the Ottoman Empire, or at all events its relegation to North Eastern Anatolia, can offer a lasting remedy for the troubles in Macedonia and Armenia.

"An agreement between England and Russia, which, owing to the irrespective affiliation would virtually amount to a quadruple alliance, should have a material effect on the work done at the next Hague congress. Scarcely in our time are we likely to witness a conjuncture more propitious for a concerted reduction of military and naval armaments which would considerably lessen the fiscal burdens borne by European people. Hitherto the proposal of such a reduction has not met with a favorable response from Germany or France, but the whole situation would be changed by a realignment of powers which would make war upon the Rhine desirable for neither neighbor."

EDITOR'S MAIL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN.

SIR,—My letter to you of the 16th inst., requires an explanation, otherwise I might seem to do an injustice, for I might be deemed to have included ALL the Post Office clerks in the charge I made of carelessness and incivility.

There are Postal clerks in Charlottetown, I have known for many years against whom I have no cause of complaint, nor do I know any one who has. The clerks to whom I alluded, are those having charge of the delivery wicket and their names are Grant and Haney.

I had no idea how deep and how widely spread is the dissatisfaction of the public with the manner in which it is treated.

Since the publication of my letter I have been stopped in the streets by persons who have thanked me for it, and each one had his tale of incivility inflicted upon him or some of his family.

A gentleman who occupies one of the first positions in Charlottetown assured me that by reason of the insults of his daughter from the clerks of the delivery wicket, she does not and will not personally apply for her letters. Had the clerks known who she was their conduct would no doubt have been otherwise because they are of that kind who grovel before those who occupy a higher position than they, or who are possessed of more means than their's. One very respectable person told me that his daughter, a girl between 15 and 16 years of age, called for her letters. The clerk would not take the trouble to look if there were any, he told her there were none saying in a jeering and impertinent manner, "what do you want letters for, go home and go to bed."

And this is from the servants of the public towards the people who contribute their money in the way of taxes to pay for such offensive conduct towards them and their families.

It is not my intention to champion the grievances of the public and I am not desirious of punishing the men. I have no intention even of resenting the insolence I have received, for I do not claim a right to any greater courtesy than that offered to the general public.

Those men have chosen to enter into a personal contest with me. Be it so. Let the issue be clearly defined. My intention is to insist that any lad who lives with me is entitled to receive his letters and to be treated with ordinary courtesy, not because he is my servant-boy but because he is one of the public and is here fore entitled to such treatment by those who are public servants.

Yours truly
E. J. HODGSON.

THE INGLESIDE.

When the shadows downward glide
Fancy rules the ingleside,
And within the glowing fire
Lie the Dream fields of Desire.

Brighter than the lighted lamps
Gleam the stars on far-off camps,
Warmer than the pine-log glow
Wait the lips of long ago.

There is not a lover fair
But her face is pictured there,
There is not a comrade true
But goes redly riding through.

There is ne'er a dream of fame
But takes shape in yonder flame,
There is ne'er a song of love
But is sung in yonfred grove.

Soft and grey a cinder falls;
Camp and grove and castle walls
Fade away in dust and flame
With our dreams of love and fame;

Yet, when shadows downward glide
Fancy rules the ingleside,
And we find amid the fire
Dream flowers of the old Desire.
—W. H. Ogilvie, in London Outlook.

REGAINED NERVE AND VITAL ENERGY.

From Walton P.O., Que., comes the following from Mr. Nazaire Begin—"If anyone had told me any remedy could build up my nervous system so well, I would not have believed them. Before using Ferrozone I was run down in nerve and vital energy, and in very weak health. I did'nt get enough sleep at night, felt poorly in the day time. Ferrozone has filled me with energy and vim, increased my weight and made a new man of me."

Hundreds tell the same story—Weak and dispirited, everything going wrong, unable to catch up. They took Ferrozone and all was changed to health and serenity. Price 50c per box at all dealers.
