

NEWS of the WORLD in PICTURES

Pictured as they arrived in San Pedro, Calif., to begin a 34-day good will tour of the United States are Crown Prince Frederick and Princess Ingrid of Denmark. Attired in natty uniform, the prince was mistaken for a naval officer by one reporter.

Bishop Fan Stylian Noll, above, former President-Premier of Albania, long in exile in the U. S., solicited to Boston newspapermen that Adolf Hitler would be crowned "emperor of a new Holy Roman Empire," possibly on next Christmas.

New British steel air raid shelters recently were given tests as destructively real as war. At top, smoke and debris spurt skyward as a heavy bomb explodes at one of the bombproofs in the Shoeburyness, England, test range. Below, a man emerges from the emergency opening of the shelter after the "air raid."

Buried in snow which came thundering down the Pyrenees mountains, the village of Barges, France, is pictured in burial shroud. The slide killed 28 townspeople, kept others snowbound in their homes for many days.

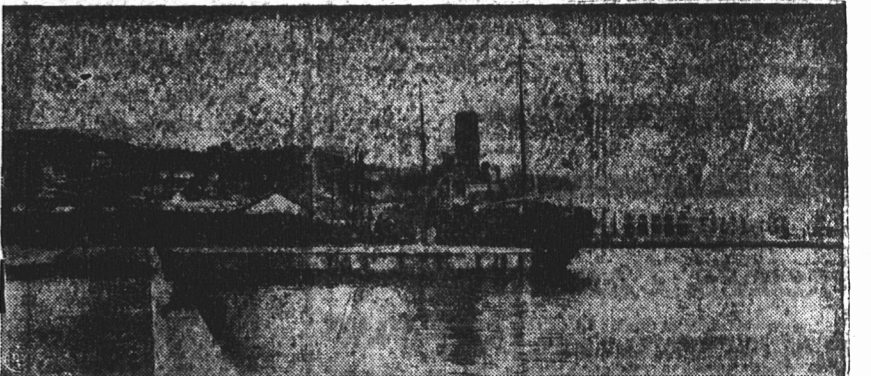

While uniformed Nazis stand and jeer, a hapless Jewish family, its few belongings crammed into brief-cases, hurries along to join thousands of other refugees who fled the Nazi deluge in Memel.

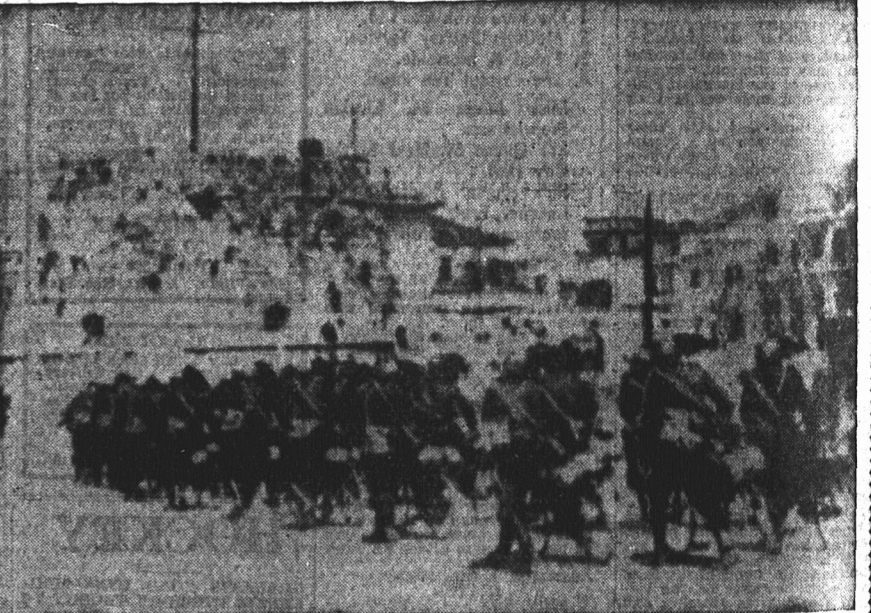

Gen. Alberto Pariani, above, chief of Italy's general staff, conferred at Innsbruck, Austria, with Col.-Gen. Wilhelm Kettel, head of Germany's armed forces. Pariani was formerly adviser to army of Albania, Italy's Adriatic objective.

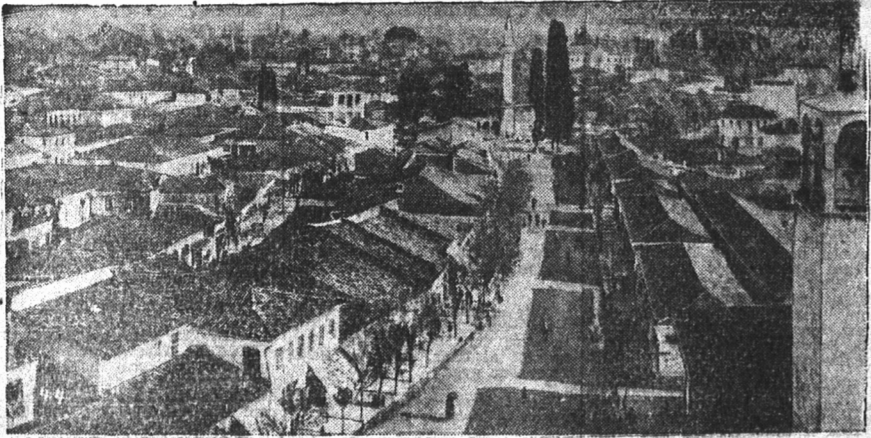

Strict adherence by the Bermuda Assembly to the island's famed ban on automobiles cost them the services of General Sir Reginald Hildyard, above, Governor of Bermuda. He resigned after the Assembly had consistently refused him a car.

Albanian port of Durazzo, on Adriatic sea, where Italian troops are reported to have landed.

Just debarked from a transport, these Italian cycle soldiers roll into Durazzo, Albania, to take over in the name of Italy. Note the shell-struck fort in the background. (NEA Radiophoto)

Above is a view of Tirana, capital of Albania, which fell to Mussolini's legions last week.

An Albanian mountain patrol, above, of colorfully costumed native fighters like those who came down from the mountains to battle the Italians in the current fighting is pictured in a characteristic charge across open ground from a tiny mountain village. Right, mother of a few days old boy, Queen Geraldine at Albania, top, and King Zog, lower, have found a haven in Greece after Italian troops invaded Albania.

The actual occupation of Durazzo, Albania, by Italian forces is shown in this radiophoto. From the transports, left, which ferried them across the Adriatic, soldiers, tanks and war materials are landed after preliminary bombardment had smashed Albanian resistance.