...*STEEL BRIDGE.— The staff of Messrs. McKinnon Holmes and Company finished their work on the Cardigan Bridge for this season, on Tuesday last. The bridge is practically completed, the two steel spans, of a length of eighty feet, have been erected on creosoted piles in the same place as the old wooden bridge. One thing left unfinished was the concrete platform. The structure will not be planked but concreted and as the builders thought it was too late for concreting the work was left over until next spring. As a result, the temporary bridge, adjacent to the new structure, will have to be used until the time of completion.

...SERIOUS FIRE.— On Wednesday evening, November 12th, a fire broke out in the rooms of Undertaker W. L. Dingwell, Souris, which practically ruined his splendidly equipped and beautiful place of business. It originated upstairs from some unknown cause and made considerable progress before it was discovered. Mr. Dingwell, with some friends, was talking over business matters in his office, the door of which was closed, when he became aware that something unusual was taking place in the building. He arose to investigate and on opening the door, discovered his place full of smoke. Closely followed by his friends, he rushed out to save his funeral car and hearse, which were in the rear part of the building. An alarm was given and soon large numbers arrived on the scene. Everything movable was quickly carried from the lower part of the building and, as it was impossible to get upstairs, the doors were shut in order to stop draughts as much as possible. In the meantime the fire brigade had arrived, placed their ladders, and entered the upper windows. In a few minutes both gasoline pumping engine and hand pump were in action and the flames were subdued, but not before the upper part of the building was badly damaged. Although Mr. Dingwell had a light insurance on both building and stock, yet his loss is heavy. On the day of the fire he added four new caskets to his stock and not having room for these on the ground floor, he had them placed upstairs. They were completely destroyed, together with some eight or nine others. He also lost several outside shells, almost all his clothing, linen, tools, paints, etc. Mr. Dingwell deserves great credit for the promptness with which he acted in having his property removed to a place of safety and is grateful to his friends for the timely assistance they rendered.—.

...*REPAIRS NEEDED.— The bridge over St. Peters Bay is in an extremely poor condition for travelling on, especially for teams with heavy loads. This bridge is one over which there is as much if not more traffic, than on any other on the Island, as it is the only connecting link between two sides of the bay ten miles long, and both sides of which are very thickly populated, and it is a disgrace to an otherwise progressive community, that is not put in better shape. It has been "fixed" at different times, the "fixing", consisting of the dumping of a few loads of stone, here and there over the surface, and the only way of making a successful passage being by a series of leap-frog stunts from one heap of stones, to the other. The citizens claim that while this method of "fixing", is continued, they will have the same condition Spring and Fall that they have now, and they are agitating for a plank covering over the entire structure, which they state is the only way of resisting the rains and frost. The writer hopes that they will get together, and devise some plan, among them, for raising the funds to do the good work.—U

O'Harrow, which arrived in port last week and discharged a cargo of coal for Matthew & McLean Co., is still at their wharf where she is loading cod-fish. Smith, arrived in port last week and is now at Matthew & McLean's wharf, where she is discharging her cargo of 106 tons of Inverness coal for that firm.—The coaster Nellie J. King, which arrived from Liverpool some ten days ago in charge of Captain Goodick is still at Matthew & McLean's wharf where she is loading up produce. She expects to complete her cargo in the course of a few days.—Captain Harpell brought his schooner Uncle Sam to port on Friday and anchored at Matthew & McLean's wharf where he discharged a large amount of salt, after which he moved to the railway wharf and began loading produce for Thomas Kickham, Souris West. This cargo will be taken to Halifax for disposal.—The Daisy Vaughan, in charge of Capt. De Coste, is also at the railway wharf where she is being loaded with produce by J. J. Hughes & Co.—The Schooner Medeiro arrived from Halifax in ballast on Thursday last and is anchored at the railway wharf. She has been chartered by Matthew & McLean Co. to load produce.*
