HUNDRED YEARS OF AGE HAD ONLY 25 BIRTHDAYS

WINNIPEG, March 10.—Although technically he has had only twenty-three birthdays, J. S. Stevenson of Winnipeg entered his hundredth year today hale and hearty. Mr. Stevenson was born February 29, 1824, and has been cheated out of about 75 birthdays. He even skipped a leap year, because the day was rightfully his in 1900, when by a quirk of the calendar he was mised again. Mr. Stevenson came to Canada when he was nine years old, and forty years ago moved from Ontario to Manitoba.

EDINBURGH STUDENTS MAKE LL. GEORGE QUIT

EDINBURGH, March 10.— Former Premier Lloyd George was forced abruptly to conclude the annual rectorial address he was delivering at the academic hall today, when Edinburgh University students pelted the parquette with bags of flour.

The students, to whom the affair meant nothing more than a good-natured "rag," crowded the galleries and bombarded those below with bags that burst and covered the audience and the speaker with clinging white dust.

The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

A NEW FRIEND
Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

Ruth O'Niel and Myra Weed have been chums from childhood and plan when they are 18 to go to the city together. Myra frankly wishing to enjoy herself, and Ruth to take a business course. Ruth knows she must support her family, and the little town she lives in offers no opportunity.

But the little money necessary to send her to the city must be used for her father, who is ill, and Ruth has to sacrifice her trip and her chance to study. Myra goes, however. Tim Turner, a nice boy in the village, asks Ruth to marry him, but though she loves him very much she refuses because neither has any money.

Tim goes to the city to make his fortune, and while there falls in love with Myra. Ruth is heartbroken when she hears of their engagement, and feels that not only her chance to learn and to work but her chance to be happy has gone. Then her Aunt Sarah visits them and takes Ruth to the city with her. The girl must now watch the happiness of her two friends, while she stands aside neglected.

Chapter 43.

When Ruth pulled herself away from Tim's embrace and rushed up the stairs, he stood for a moment looking after her through the glass of the door, too upset to move. Someone rattled a latch-key outside of the pavement, and remembering that his position in the dim vestibule was curious, he opened the front door and went out on the street. His head was down and he walked slowly not thinking of where he was going.

He did love Ruth. There was no doubt about that. It was an irresistible impulse that made him suddenly gather her into his arms and try to comfort her. And Ruth loved him. It was in her eyes. It was on her lips—when she yielded for the moment to his kisses.

But Myra loved him also, and he loved her! And Tim was a little pleased that two such attractive girls should care for him in spite of his real concern over all that had happened. He had a feeling that he had not played fair to Ruth. He should have broken it to her gently as, during the winter his affection for Myra grew.

He was not a very happy young man. But Tim had the very pleasant ability of casting off any thought that worried him, so he now put both girls out of his mind and went on down to his own lodgings.

And he never slept more soundly than he did that night.

But that could not be said of the high-strung girl whom he had left. Ruth closed the door of her room and stood leaning against it, breathless, frightened, glad, angry, and broken hearted—a complication of emotions that any woman very much in love is capable of achieving. Breathless from her run up the stairs and her fright, glad he had wanted her and that for one brief moment, in his arms she had forgotten the whole unhappy affair—broken-hearted as the reality came back to her, and angry growing angrier every moment, that he had cofessed his love for another woman and then had kissed her and claimed he loved her too! How could he love both, if his affection for either was real.

It was too complicated for her to reason out. After a bit she calmed down and went to bed.

But not to sleep. Not even her natural health and her fatigue from the day's exercise could bring that relief

She slept most of the next day however, and for several days after that she wandered about the city alone. She felt she would not see Tim again. She was glad of that at least.

During the day she "explored" as she called it to herself, and in short time she had been all over the city. She went alone one day through Brooklyn to the much heard-of Cony Island and while the tawdriness of the place revolted her (for an amusement park out of season is the dreariest place in the world) her first view of the ocean was an immense delight. She bought sandwiches and spent the long spring day walking up and down the beach and sniffing the salty air.

In the evenings she was afraid to go about alone, and as she knew no one and made no friends in the little boarding house, she got into the habit of going down to the library and spending her whole evening reading. She felt like a millionaire with so many thousands of books that were hers for the askng—lovely books her father had talked about, which the small library at home did not have.

Then one day she received a note in a strange hand. It read—

"Dear Miss O'Niel:

"I'm giving a little party for Myra's birthday on Thursday and want you to come. As I'm working if can't be until after the show, so come at 11 o'clock and I'll see that there is someone to take you safely home."

It was signed "Gabrielle Cartez." Ruth smiled with pleasure. She did not want to see Myra particularly—She still felt that her chum had been unfair. But after all, she had to see her sometime again, and she had to see Tim with her, and it might as well be with a party on to distract her attention. Besides she was young and loved pleasure, and the idea of a gay party was most alluring.

She went around about 10 o'clock wanting to talk to Myra first.

That young lady was dressing in her very finest or rather Emily's finest gown. Ruth had on the little white dress she had graduated in that had been "best" ever since.

"But you can't wear that, darlin'" Myra exclaimed, kissing her and loking her over. "You look countrified. You're just got to wear one of my things. Never mind half the people coming tonight won't remember ever seeing it on me. Try this. I shan't wear it again its awfully worn."

Ruth had to consent since her old fashioned white wash dress did look so badly in contrast to Myra's gorgeousness. She mended the dress first, then slipped it on —a gray chiffon that to her was cut shockingly low.

"We'll just cut off this top tunic," Myra decided, getting a pair of scissers. "That's the soiled one. Now see, its a different dress!" The removal of the torn fabric did make it look fresh and quite different in style. Ruth decided. And when Myra added a flame-colored chiffon scarf, she felt very much pleased with herself.

"My, but you do look different! Try your hair like mine." In her desire to "dress up" her old chum Myra was forgetting all her self consciousness. Between them they piled Ruths hair high on her head. Then it was found that a pair of Emily's gray suede slippers, too small for Myra, were about Ruth size.

"Look at yourself now!" Myra cried.

And Ruth turined to the mirror.

Wash Your Kidneys By Drinking Water

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers, Also Take Some Salts

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. GORDON D. MACDONALD.

Seldom have we been called upon to chronicle so sad a death as that of Mrs. Gordon S. Macdonald (nee Miss Sadie Jane McCallum) which occurred in the hospital at Blairmore, near Coleman, Alberta, on February 11, 1923.

Mrs. Macdonald, in the prime of womanhood, being in the 29th year of her age, of naturally strong physique, and on whose countenance glowed the bloom of health—seemed one whose life would long be spared. But in the midst of life we are in death.

Owing to what at first seemed to be an ordinary indisposition, but which later proved to be peritonitis, her physician recommended her removal to the hospital in order that a necessary operation be performed.

Adverse results followed, and although the faculty had hopes that her fine physical strength might offset the danger, later complications made it evident that she could not survive—and on the following evening, Sunday, her spirit peacefully passed away. Then followed the long and sorrowful journey of the husband with the mortal remains of his beloved one to her native home in Alliston, P.E.I., where a grief-stricken family sadly awaited the arrival.

It is a little over two years since Mr. Macdonald, with his young wife, left for the West. They located at Coleman, Alberta, where Mr. Macdonald secured a splendid position with the McGillvray Coke and Coal Co.

The deceased is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Obadiah Mc Callum, of Alliston, P.E.I., besides whom the bereaved members of the family are:—One sister, Priscilla, at home; and five brothers, Daniel in California, Rufus in Idaho, Malcolm in Winnipeg, and Neil and Obadiah at home.

The funeral services were most efficiently conducted by Rev. J. S. McKay, of Murray Harbor North. The funeral procession to the cemetery at Murray Harbor North was unusually large, expressive of the respect in which the deceased was held.

To the bereaved husband, father, mother and family the deep sympathy of the community is extended.

When on my day of life the night
is falling,
And in the winds from unsunned
spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness
calling
My feet to paths unknown.
Thou, Who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls
decay,
O, Love Divine, O, Helper ever present,
Be Thou my strength and stay!
(Patriot please copy.)

MRS. JOHN DOCHERTY.

There passed peacefully away at her home, Colville Road, on the morning of February 19th, 1923, Mrs. John Docherty (nee Mary Anne Weatherbie) after an illness of about four months, borne with Christian patience, hope and fortitude, passed within the veil, her husband having predeceased her some eight years ago. Mrs. Docherty was in her 68th year. As a faithful, kind and loving mother, she could not be surpassed. She was unselfish, untiring and industrious in her efforts to make her home a place of happiness and bliss. But her influence could not be confined there, for it found an outlet wherever there was sicknes or help needed. She was ever ready and willing to do her part cheerfully. Mrs. Docherty was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Weatherbie, of Ocean View, P. E. Island. She leaves to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother, five sons and two daughters: Daniel and John, of Kingston; Kenneth, of New Haven; Mrs. John M. McPhee, of Riverdale; Sadie and George at home; also three brothers and two sisters: John Weatherbie, of Ocean View, P.E.I.; William H. of Olympia; George D., of Vancouver, B.C. There was also another brother, Malcolm J., of Olympia, who predeceased her some thirteen years ago. The sisters are Mrs. Murdoch Buchannan, of Boston, Mass., and Mrs. Ronald MacLellan, of Glace Bay, C.B. The large funeral, which took place from her home to Clyde River Presbyterian cemetery, on Wednesday afternoon, February 21, evidenced the fact that she was held in high esteem in the community, there being over ninety sleighs in the procession. The funeral service was conducted at the house and grave by the Rev. M. J. McPherson, of Hampton, who also visited her during her illness. The pall-bearers were Malcolm Buchannan, Nicholas Colwill, Joseph Gallant, Cornelius Cahille, Angus McPhee and Duncan McGilvary.

A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is still,
A vacant place is in our home,
Which never can be filled.

GATHERING THE HATCHING EGGS

It is very important to protect the hatching eggs from getting chilled during a cold snap. Gather the eggs frequently and line the basket with paper and cover the top with a cloth. This will serve to keep the eggs from getting chilled. If such precautions are not taken quite a few of the eggs may fail to hatch, and this means loss of chicks and loss of money. Every fertile egg should be given the best possible chance to develop into a vigorous profit making chick.
