Toronto Exchange

TORONTO, Oct. 16—(CP)—The Canadian government statement reiterating the government's intention to transfer men from gold mines to more essential employment weakened the gold shares today in the Toronto market. The group declined 1.02 in the index, merely wiping out the gain posted in the previous session. Base metal and industrial stocks slipped off .22 and .29 respectively and the western oils firmed .09. Volume at 165,000 shares was the heaviest in a week.

When the Premier's announcement was made public at noon stock prices slipped off for sizable losses in spots but recoveries here and there developed in the final quarter-hour.

Waite-Amulet, off 25 cents to 3.50, was the weakest of the base metal stocks. In the industrial section weakness spread in the liquor, food, steel and aircraft groups.

Okalta posted a gain of 5 cents to 30 and Home Oil was up 3 cents to 2.25. Other western oils were unchanged.

Montreal Exchange

MONTREAL, Oct. 16—(CP)—Senior metals were easier and leaders in other groups irregular today in stock exchange and curb market trading.

On the stock exchange International Nickel, Hudson Bay Mining and Consolidated Smelters all backed up a bit. Imperial was down slightly in oils.

Winnipeg Electric "A" and "B" were shaded in utilities and Shawinigan was harder. Canada Steamship and C.P.R. lost ground in carriers.

Dominion Bridge did better in industrials but Asbestos and St. Lawrence Corporation were losers. In miscellaneous, Penmans and Imperial Tobacco preferred improved and Celanese preferred and Tuckett were in arrears.

In the banking division, Montreal was strong, rising 6½.

Total sales: 16,900 shares; Industrials, 6,800; Mines, 10,100.

Tells of Attack On Convoy In St. Lawrence

(Some time ago Harold Freeman, Canadian Press Staff Writer, travelled down the St. Lawrence River on a Canadian warship escorting a convoy. In the following story he tells of a daylight torpedo attack which damaged one of the convoy's freighters. Publication of the story was delayed until now for naval security reasons.)

By HAROLD FREEMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

AN EASTERN CANADIAN PORT, October 16— (CP) — The freighter Frederika Lensen, a medium-sized British merchantman, was struck amid-ships by a torpedo in a daring mid-day attack on a convoy in the St. Lawrence River some time ago.

Four men were killed when the torpedo crashed into the engine-room of the ship off Cap De La Madeleine. The remaining 43 crewmen took to the lifeboats and were picked up by naval escorts. The damaged freighter was taken in tow by a corvette and was subsequently beached at a river port.

Clouds Of Steam

From the bridge of a Canadian warship I saw the freighter swing out of the convoy line, with thick clouds of steam bursting from her port side, and watched this and other escort vessels fan out to protect the remainder of the convoy and hunt the attacker.

There was no explosion audible to us. One minute the convoy was steaming along in bright sunlight sparkling on a placid river. The next, the freighter was swinging around, listing to starboard and belching steam from her port side.

As the first steam burst from the stricken ship, our Bangor-class escort leaped ahead from her position half-a-mile astern of the freighter, a little Fairmile came cutting in on the starboard side and a corvette turned on a dime from her position ahead of the convoy to help.

Reach Freighter

Ours was the first ship to reach the freighter, just after her starboard lifeboats hit the water and went drifting astern. As we skidded around the wreck in a full-ahead turn we could see a narrow split in her port side, with the plates around the crack bulged outward as though pushed by some internal force.

She looked deserted and lonely sitting there in her dirty grey paint, with her twisted sides and her list to starboard, but she didn't appear to be getting any lower in the water.

There was no gaping hole such as is usually associated with a torpedo explosion, and there had been no flash of flame when the missile struck. It looked more like a boiler explosion than a torpedo, but the escorts took no chances. Their swift dispesition into attack stations made the water close to the convoy a veritable death-trap for any submarine.

Seek Contact

One fast look at the freighter to establish the probable direction of the attack, and then we were racing out on the Lensen's port beam with our submarine-detecting asdic sweeping the water in search of a contact.

None came, but off to starboard a fairmile let go with depth charges that shook us up although we were some distance away. The fairmile seemed his, or else the submarine had fired the torpedo at extreme range, farther afield than the escorts could go with a convoy to protect.

This was the second time the Frederertika Lensen had been damaged through enemy action. Once before she was sunk in Liverpool Harbour during a bombing raid, but she was raised and refitted.

It was thought possible the sub fired a "Browning shot," an extreme range torpedo aimed in the general direction of the convoy in hopes of hitting something rather than a carefully-aimed shot at one particular ship. The torpedo apparently almost passed under the Lensen, but rose sufficiently to strike her directly on the bottom.

Vichy Jailors Find Blum Implacable

LONDON, Oct. 14 — (CP) — Former French Premier Leon Blum [illegible] "most detestable" of the prominent men held by the Vichy Government at Bourrarel, according to the Brussels newspaper Le Soir.

The [illegible] was quoted as saying: "Blum has lost none of his insolence, his eyes are colder than ever behind his glasses."

Of other prisoners they said:

Gen Marie Gamelin, former Allied generalissimo, is the "least arrogant."

Former Premier Daladier, "a collapsed man without will, who rises late, speaks little, and reads much."

Guy La Chambre, former air minister, "complains about the food."

Paul Reynaud, Premier when France collapsed, "reads the papers and does physical exercises."

TIMELY NOTES ON TOPICS CONNECTED WITH Silver Fox Farming

George A. Cadbeck, Manager of the Fur Marketing Department of the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeder's Association left on Tuesday last for an inspection trip of ranches that will take him clear through to the coast. He is not expected to return until around the first of December.

Don Stewart, President of the Canadian Silver Fox Breeders' Association, paid a visit to Charlottetown yesterday and we had an interesting conversation with him, and succeeded in extracting two very nice photos of his platinum foxes that are very beautiful indeed.

George Lilly, Manager of International Foxes and Furs ranch at Marshfield, arrived home recently from a visit to the head office and ranches of the company in Michigan. George is a close observer and we managed to get some pertinent information from him. He says that the fox ranchers in the U.S.A. are having the same troubles we are having in marketing their pelts. Prices are very low and some of the larger ranchers are holding a considerable number of pelts in cold storage. He saw pelts that had been in cold storage ten months and were apparently as fresh looking as when they were put in. He also saw others that had been offered for sale on the auction rings, brought back home, redrummed and placed in cold storage that seemed like fresh pelts. He believes that some of the largest people in the industry will hold back a considerable number of skins rather than sacrifice them.

We queried him particularly re the quality of the foxes he saw. He said those on their home ranches were good because they had the proper facilities such as covered wire bottom sheds and pens, but that many ranchers had the old style equipment and the foxes seemed very dry and slightly brown or off-colorish.

Many ranchers are planning to either go out of business or cut down considerably in their breeding pairs. Asked about the fox situation he said that did not seem to offer any problem at all, that at the home ranch they had a hundred or more horses grazing and being taken care of that would be used later on in the season or killed and kept in cold storage. These were bought cheaply, nice, heavy bulk horses purchased at an average of one cent per pound live weight. Cereals had not advanced in prices, at least not to any extent and there was no question but that the American fox farmer had a tremendous advantage in feed prices compared with ourselves.

We asked him if he thought the climate here was more favorable for the development of good pelts. He said he could not say definitely whether it was or was not, but one thing was sure we do produce better pelts here, but that is probably because we have better breeding stock and take better care of it. He qualified the statement, however, by saying that he did not mean to infer that good pelts were not produced in the United States. He said that in the home ranch there were some very fine animals and he could name many ranches that produced high class beautiful silvers and the new mutations. Incidentally we may state that George has a nice crop of foxes himself this year and that his efforts to develop bright silvers has been rewarded — and well rewarded too.

We are a little late, but better late than never, in stating that we are glad to see around about and wearing his usual happy smile, Reg Jenkins, proprietor of P.E.I. Foxes and Furs, and well known distributor of fox feed products and purchaser of silver fox pelts. Reg was a sick man for quite a long time but is now completely recovered.

Advices from the New York fur trade are that mink are being purchased freely at present levels and are going into production of coats and other fur accessories. Many of the dealers are featuring mink, which is one reason for their expanding sales. The same is not true of silver foxes yet, according to Women's Wear Daily, but there are hopes that the picture will brighten soon. No discernible improvement has been noticed in the average of prices of silver fox on the American market, but the sale of Neiman's was satisfactory in that a very high percentage of goods was bought.

W. Chester S. McLure returned on Thursday evening from an extended visit to Montreal and Toronto during which time he paid particular attention to the fur markets. Fritz Weissler who was our top notch buyer of silver fox pelts here last December and January, has had a big turnover due to his energy and ability to make friends. Mr. McLure considers that Mr. Weissler is really an outstanding authority on the fur business, which he should be, as prior to coming to this country he operated very large stores in Vienna, Berlin and Leipzig. Mr. Weissler has not lost faith in silver fox by any means and is busy endeavoring to develop trade channels that will enable him to buy a goodly portion of our Prince Edward Island pelties that he regards as among the finest procurable.

Mr. McLure had a very good opportunity to observe what the other side of the fur trade, that is those not producing are up against. For instance there was a case of a man who bought a goodly parcel of pelts. These were to be delivered dressed. The dressing took six weeks due to shortage of help and other causes, so that when the seller delivered the goods the buyer declined on the grounds that he could not secure the necessary cloth and trimmings to make up the furs into coats. Labor is being diverted or drafted and the many restrictions cause inconveniences too numerous to mention.

Export trade to South America is practically non-existant due to the hazards and high insurance rate of water conveyance, while priority prevents delivery by plane. Doubtless some method will be found to overcome this, but on the surface it looks as though our American cousins will have an advantage in their nearer proximity and greater devotion to the problems connected with North and South American transit.

Every dark cloud has its silvery lining, said Mr. McLure, and after all if there were not difficulties everything would be too easy and the business would slump because of that fact. "I have faith" said he, "that matters will ultimately adjust themselves, although at present the expectation is that with the carry over which is quite considerable at this period, and the larger number of pelts that will be on the market because of so many ranchers cutting down or going out of business that we will be in for a season much like that which we went through in the fall of 1939 and spring of 1940.

TO SOLDIERS' WIVES AND FAMILIES
TO MIDDLE AGED WOMEN

You can do some real War Work and earn a good living by raising chickens.

Island climate and other conditions are especially favourable to poultry farming, because of the remarkable freedom from disease.

The demand for eggs and dressed chickens is far in excess of the supply and, at present prices, the profit is large.

A chicken farm need not be large but should be near an egg-grading station.

Old farm buildings and fox ranches can be converted into chicken houses at little cost for lumber etc.

The most successful chicken ranchers buy prepared feeds and save the cost of grain growing.

We have a number of small farms for sale, specially suitable for chicken farming, with comfortable houses, that can be purchased at low prices —some of them on terms.
