JUST ask one of the telephone operators who serves you how she manages to maintain such unflinching courtesy at a big switchboard. "It wasn't easy at first," she'll admit. "I found that a sedentary job indoors all day was almost too much for me. I realized that if I was going to make good on the job—and I loved it—I'd have to keep myself in the very pink of condition. "I've done it with Nujol—nothing else. It's kept me from having headaches and colds and that awful let-down feeling. Kept my nerves from getting jangled and fatigued, too. "My doctor tells me that Nujol isn't a medicine. It's simply a pure natural substance. It keeps your system functioning as nature meant it to, even under abnormal conditions. It not only prevents an excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming, but aids in their removal. "Nujol can't possibly hurt you or upset you. Get a bottle today. Perfected by the famous Nujol Laboratories, 26 Broadway, New York. It's sold at all drugstores, in sealed packages only.

Blue Murder

BY EDMUND SHELL

Taverner went out in search of Marney alone. In the privacy of his own bedroom after dinner he had lectured Haye on the importance of keeping his mouth shut. The fact that they had inquired about Dighton would in no way connect them with the morning's outrage. There was just a chance that an observant clerk might notice that the girl and one of the newly registered guests possessed the same name, but that quite probably would be looked upon as a coincidence. English names were always a mystery to foreigners. The Casino Hotel had possibly had as many as three unrelated Smiths on its list at one time. Strutting downhill toward the lights of the main town, Taverner tried to piece together this elaborate jig-saw puzzle. According to the writer's story, his niece had broken her journey at Rapallo to see Dighton. This was the most puzzling point of all. So far as he was aware, she had seen him for only one evening. All three of them had dined together at Donati's in Oxford street and afterward Dighton and she had danced at the Cockatoo Club. He paused by the railings opposite the palm trees and gazed pensively out to sea. Looking back on that evening, he remembered how eagerly they had danced together, how extraordinarily friendly they had become within a few brief hours. Dighton was an uncommonly good-looking fellow and Greta was the kind of girl that would attract any man. Was it possible, he demanded, that unknown to himself these two youngsters had come to an understanding? Stranger things than that had happened. He was dealing with improbabilities every day of his life. For what other reason could he have left the Rome train to visit Dighton at his hotel? He turned away from the water and moved across the piazza toward the entrance to the Via Emilia. The little greengrocer's shop was in darkness. He rapped on the door with his stick and a hoarse voice challenged him from an upper window. "Who is it?" "I am looking for the Signor Marney." The head was withdrawn and after a short interval he heard heavy footsteps on the bare boards within. The door opened a matter of six inches and the large, unshaven face of Guglielmo Fontanelli thrust out. That Taverner was no stranger to Rapallo was evident from the greengrocer's expansive smile. "Il Colonnello!" was his joyful welcome. And he dragged his visitor inside. Taverner, hurried through the airy atmosphere of the shop to the accompaniment of murmured apologies from Fontanelli, found himself pushed into a chair before a table upon which a bottle of wine and glasses made their appearance. The Signora Fontanelli—larger than her husband, and with a tremendous mountain of hair which looked strange in these days of shingling—beamed at him from the kitchen doorway, with a bright-eyed signorina peering over her shoulder. The greengrocer sipped a little wine into his own glass and filled Taverner's to the brim. "Il Colonnello," he exclaimed again. "To think that I kept you waiting in the street! Is it possible?" A round of drinks and the signora and her daughter vanished discreetly, leaving the men to talk. Taverner passed his host a cigar. "Where's Marney?" he inquired. "The Signor Americano is out," explained the other, "but we expect him back at any moment. We had the police here this morning—" "The Baronet started." "The police?" he echoed. "It was purely a formality," Fontanelli hastened to assure him. "Something had disappeared from the Villa Sabino, and they were searching the quarters of all foreigners known to be in residence here." "They found nothing?" "Nothing whatever, Signor Colonnello. He tapped a broad nose with his forefinger. "It was too well hidden!" Taverner drew in a deep breath. "Then there was something, Fontanelli?" "There were two things," admitted the Italian in a hoarse whisper. "The young Englishman and Signor Marney brought them here last night very late—and we were an hour concealing them after he had gone—A drop more wine, Signor?" Taverner shook his head. "I am getting old, Fontanelli," he declared, "and I cannot drink as I

Stomach Trouble Caused Agony

Mr. Henry Senecal, Desjardine St., Montreal, knows what it is to be tortured with Stomach Trouble. "For the past year," he writes, "I have suffered agonies. Indigestion made me deathly sick—my eyes were hard to keep open. I had dizzy spells and raging headaches; sleep was broken; and I was tired all the time. I have lost many a day's work on account of my condition, and I could have saved all this suffering and loss of time had I taken Tanlac in the beginning. For after my fifth bottle of Tanlac I am now in the best of health—eat anything—sleep well—do a big day's work and have gained nine pounds in the past two months. I gladly recommend Tanlac to anyone." If you are bothered with Stomach Trouble, Indigestion, Gas, Pain after eating, get Tanlac today. Let it help you as it helped Mr. Senecal. Why not let Tanlac do for you what it did for this sufferer and for thousands of others? It is marvelous how it cures the most obstinate digestive troubles—relieves gas pains in the stomach and bowels. How it restores vitality, vigor and sound sleep. Tanlac is made of roots, barks and herbs—nature's own medicines for the sick. The cost is less than 2 cents a dose. Get a bottle from your druggist today. Your money back if it doesn't help you.

used. Besides, I have flown from England today and I am tired. Your daughter is dancing at a fine girl." The greengrocer slapped his thigh and chuckled. "A man is never old when he can find something to admire in a woman! Si Signora Paola is good-looking enough they tell me—and a good-looking daughter is a responsibility in these days." He sprang to his feet as a door slammed behind him and Marney came into the room. "Say, Chief!" he gasped as soon as he recognized Taverner. "This is a surprise, sure enough. What's in the wind?" "Quite a lot, so far as I have been able to gather." His hand dropped on Marney's shoulder. "You had my wire?" "Why sure, I got that this morning." "Any news of Miss Haye?" "The American tossed his hat into a corner and sat down. A curt nod to Fontanelli left them alone. "Listen here, Chief!" Dighton raised his voice. "I've got a couple more of those guns. One was of the type we've already seen; the other was a more powerful thing altogether. It was a peach of a raid. I saw it from the gate—and I know. "Right on top of your cable the police rolled up and searched the place inside out. It was a German car, as it happened, only we took advantage of it. They weren't suspecting us, but were just making sure. Anyway they got nothing for their trouble and beat it empty handed. "By the time I'd got across to see Dighton the lizard had knocked a guy out in the hotel, taken his car and made off in an automobile. Somewhere or other Dighton got wind of it and followed. The two cars crashed on a lonely strip of road between Sestri Levante and Borgaturo and all I found when I got there was Dighton, shot through the chest." Taverner nodded. "How is he?—Pretty bad, I take it?" "Well," responded Marney with a flash of his gold teeth, "he ought to be dead, but he's not. He's full of fever at the moment, of course, and spilling just that sort of nonsense you expect a chap to spill when he's applied for his ticket to be refused twice in one day—and been refused each time if you don't notice." "Chief, but he won't keep her long. In my opinion, that's about the poorest move the Lizard made. A guy who wants to keep his identity a mystery is always safer to play a solo game. The police have taken this business to heart. A couple of lives were lost getting that girl away—and they're not going to forget in a hurry if you can manage to slip 'em a decent picture of Miss Haye they'll track her right enough—and where they find Miss Haye they'll find the Lizard." Taverner looked at the ceiling. "And supposing they don't?" "If they don't, then Dighton will. If there's any sense in his delirium that's his crazy on your niece, Chief." The Baronet nodded again. "I was afraid so." There was a long silence. "Dighton's a mighty good fellow," said Marney at length. Taverner paid no attention. "Aren't you a trifle optimistic?" he suggested presently. "The police have been aware of the Lizard's activities for some time past—and Dighton will be a back number for weeks, possibly months." The American shook his head. "Don't you believe it, Chief. I'll lay even money with anybody he'll be about again inside ten days. That's what I meant when I talked about his luck. It's the effect of the fall that's holding him down now." "The bullet hit a flask he was carrying and took a side-ways turn. It wouldn't have done that if it had been you or me, but Dighton's got a lucky streak in his make-up that's better than a shirt of mail. The Lizard's a poor shot with an ordinary pistol—at least that's how I figure it out. He can raise Cain with the Fockett Death, because that's fool-proof. A clean shot would have drawn a bead on Dighton's skull and made sure of him. The Lizard wanted a bigger target." Taverner rose to go. The long

Prince of Wales Is Double Winner

LONDON, Nov. 2.—A despatch to the Daily Express from El Dorset, Kenya Colony, Africa, today said that the colors of the Irish Free State failed to bring luck to the Prince of Wales in a horse race there. The colors were presented to the Prince by tiny Sheila O'Shea daughter of Thomas O'Shea who was a leading Sinn Feiner in Ireland in 1913. She also gave him a Shamrock. The Prince stopped and kissed her and then rode to the post. He made a bad start and did not place at the finish. The Prince, however, made amends for losing this race by winning the next two. His second victory was in a five furlong sprint in which he rode Gay Warrior to beat Simon Edward Grigg. The cheering was deafening as the Prince nosed his mount past the post first. consistent and vehement attack was directed upon him by a section of the Press here.

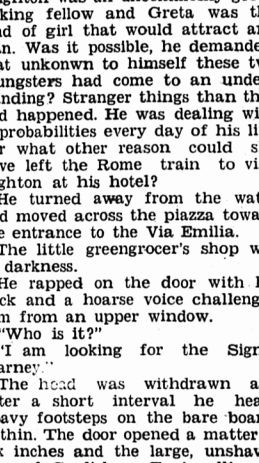

Demand for Poppies Grows

LONDON, Nov. 3.—Since the inauguration of the British Legion Poppy Day, November 11, there has been a steadily growing demand for more poppies. Since 1921 more than 153,000,000 poppies have been distributed, 28,000,000 being dispatched in the 1927 effort alone. The amounts raised have also grown from $530,000 in 1921 to $2,585,000 in 1927. The manufacture of poppies provides work for hundreds of badly disabled ex-servicemen at Edinburgh and Richmond. Work is proceeding apace for 1928. Committees are preparing their plans for the big appeal. The manufacture of poppies for 1928 started in November last year and will continue right on till November this year.

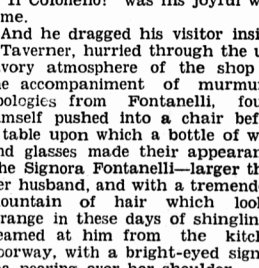

ORDER FOR LONSDALE APPROVED BY PUBLIC

LONDON, Oct. 31.—Seldom has an honor bestowed by his Majesty been received with more popular approval than in the conferment of the Order of the Garter upon Lord Lonsdale. It was in relation to this Order that Lord Melbourne, Prime Minister, made his famous remark about the "no damned merit" being associated with it. A writer of today puts more clearly what Lord Melbourne evidently intended. "This noble order of chivalry was never the special seal of great achievement," remarks the writer. "It is a reward to express it, the final gift of gilt on the gingerbread of nobility." Be that as it may, everybody from duke to dustman, will rejoice that the King has so distinguished Lord Lonsdale. He represents so much that is traditional, the picturesque, and the noble of the Englishman. He is a great sportsman, not only in the narrow meaning of the term, but in his wide charity to all men and women, and his chivalrous consideration, at all times for their feelings, his command of any situation which may turn up is a matter of delight and admiration to all. The association of there being "no merit" connected with the bestowal of the Garter must be qualified. Sir Austen Chamberlain was created K.C. for his services in connection with the Locarno Pact. Lord Kitchener received the Garter during the war, at a period when

Could Not Sleep Heart Would Start Pumping and Pounding

Mrs. Fred P. Averill, 138-12th Ave., Calgary, Alta., writes: "I was bothered so much with my heart I could not sleep. I would waken up in the night screaming, and my heart would start pumping and pounding. A neighbor lady told me to try MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS. I started taking them and I can truthfully say I am a different woman. Altogether I only took two boxes."

Education of Indian Females

LONDON, Nov. 3.—Lady Irwin, wife of the Viceroy of India, was in consultation during her stay in England this summer with some leading educationists and some of the women who have been associated with her in a movement for the rapid extension of female education in India, its dominant feature being that it is mainly in the hands of Indian women themselves. One of the outstanding obstacles to Indian national development is the glaring disparity between the educational progress of the two sexes. At the last census of the Indian Empire of fully-grown males 171 in each thousand were able to read and write in their vernacular, as compared with only 20 women. In the last ten years the proportion of male scholars under instruction in British India has grown from 4.7 to 6.5 percent of the male population, while the female advance has been only from 0.9 to 1.3 percent. Lady Irwin is president of the All-India Women's Conference on Educational Reform. It is composed of delegates from conferences previously held in all the Provinces and many Indian States. A maximum of ten delegates is allowed from each constituent conference, and the number of delegates at the second session held at Delhi last February was more than 200. All the ordinary sessions were held in Purnah, but the opening ceremony, when the chairman of the conference, the Dowager Begum of Bhopal, introduced Lady Irwin who gave an address, was public, special arrangements being made for such women as could not attend. Subsequently, a deputation waited on the Viceroy, and afterwards on the leaders of the various parties of the Indian Legislature, to urge support of a private member's Bill to raise substantially the minimum age for marriage. The next annual conference will be at Patna, and in preparation for it Provincial and Indian State constituent conferences have been arranged. A fund for the advancement of female education, started at Delhi with promises of Rs.30,000 ($11,250) made on the spot, is being collected, and a Standing Committee, with five sub-committees is at work.
