"That's not such an awful lot, is it?" Gloria asked. "And May spends money like water, too. She's most wofully extravagant."

"Well, I'll buy her all the scenery she wants for this husband-hunt at any rate. Dick answered brightly. "I hope she does land a husband! A husband just half as nice as you!" Gloria said, dropping down on the arm of Dick's chair, and muttering her remarks with little kisses on his hair. "But don't you!"

"Isn't anybody half so good as you?" anywhere in the world?"

"With a final kiss, she got up and went upstairs to the guest-room. "May I come in?" she asked, tapping on the panels of the door. Without waiting for an answer she went in.

May, with her face smeared with old cream, was sitting before the dressing table, putting water-wave bands into her sleek black hair.

"I forgot to ask you how you happened to know Ulysses X. Forgan," Gloria said. "And how did you happen to ask him to sell your house for you? Was Dr. John a friend of his?"

May nodded. "Yes, and I've seen real estate ads with his name on them around town for years," she answered. "And the name sounds so safe and substantial, somehow. . . . Ulysses X. Forgan. Quite some name, isn't it? I like it."

"Did you like him?" Gloria asked. May grinned impishly. "I'll tell you this much. . . . he liked me," she said. "Wanted to take me out to lunch, and everything!"

"Did you go?"

"Of course not." May answered blithely. "I never eat lunch—I'm going to keep my figure, even if I have lost my girlish laughter!"

"Silly!" said Gloria. But the thought struck her that May's greatest charm had been her laughter. . . . her light carelessness. . . . her reckless good nature. And she had lost that charm.

A week later May Seymour sat in the Pullman car of a train that slowly crawled across the New Jersey flat lands towards Atlantic City.

Her little black hat was demurely faced with white, and there was a white ruching around the collar of her black chiffon dress.

against the white flesh of May's slim neck, lay a neat row of black pearls. Real ones, too. . . . in the opinion of the large, florid man just across the aisle.

The large florid man had not taken his eyes from May Seymour for the last half hour. Nor, if he had but known it, had she taken her eyes from him!

He was clearly mirrored in the window pane through which May was apparently admiring the New Jersey landscape. As a matter of fact, she was watching her neighbor watch her.

"I certainly seem to have made a hit with him," she remarked pleasantly to herself. "Or else he's a jewel thief, and thinks my pearls are real."

Her hands went up to the beads around her throat. For beads were all they were. Imitation pearls, but good ones. And May had paid $50 for them only the day before.

Then her hands dropped again to the large beaded bag in her lap. Yes. . . . it was there. . . . the great roll of bills that Dick Gregory had given her a few days ago. Eight thousand dollars! All in soft green bills.

May patted the bag. A tiny smile deepened the dimple in one of her cheeks, and then faded away. It would not do for a widow. . . . even a widow with a dimple in one of her cheeks. . . . to smile too readily or too often.

A widow should be wistful. . . . That was the ideal! The Wistful Widow!

May decided when she got off the train at Atlantic City, that she was glad she had come here for a week or two, before she would even begin to think about Europe. Europe seemed so far away.

And it was cheerful, here, this warm September. The very taxicabs that dashed up to the station, and dashed away again, seemed cheerful. There was a hint of carnival in the air, even at the end of the season.

"Take me to the Traymore," she said to the taxi-driver. She leaned back against the leather cushions of the cab wondering where the large, florid man she had seen in the train, would stop. . . . But perhaps he lived here in the town. Perhaps he had a home of his own, and a wife. A large, blond, florid wife.

But when the taxicab stopped at the side entrance of the hotel, and May stepped out, the first person she saw was the florid man, himself! He was going into the hotel, just ahead of her!

CORRECTION.—In the report of the death of Mr. Myles MacDonald in yesterday's Guardian it was stated that he was a brother of Mrs. John Fraser of this city. This is incorrect. The deceased was a brother-in-law of Mr. John Fraser and no relation to Mrs. Fraser.

ENJOYABLE PICNIC.—The Women's Missionary Society of Zion Presbyterian Church held a most enjoyable picnic yesterday afternoon on the beautiful grounds of St. Simons, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Donald McKinnon. There was a large attendance and a very pleasant afternoon was spent by all. A sumptuous repast was served in the spacious dining room kindly placed at their disposal by Mrs. McKinnon for which she was accorded a hearty vote of thanks by the ladies.

AMES—PURDY.—At Watertown, Mass., July 22nd, at the home of Mr. H. O. Ames, 36 Beynard Ave., William I. Ames was united in marriage to Florence Purdy, daughter of Mrs. M. E. Purdy, of Charlotte town. The bride was given away by John Wright, of Lynn, Mass. She wore white georgette and tulle, with orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bride was attended by Mrs. Carl S. Hill, of Somerville, who wore peach colored georgette and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The best man was Mr. Richard Ames, brother of the groom. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Frank W. Ames. Mr. and Mrs. Ames left Thursday morning on a honeymoon trip to P. E. Island where they will visit the bride's mother and relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Ames will reside in Watertown on their return.

First Shipment

TORONTO, July 30.—With the arrival in Toronto today of the first shipment of Ontario 25,000 ton coal order with the Alberta authorities the Ontario government feels assured that the whole of the fuel order will come through as ordered. Over 150 cars of the Alberta product are on the way east, according to advices which have reached the Ontario authorities, of which today's first arrival formed a part. It is for Toronto distribution.

THE MARKETS

(Canadian Press)

MONTREAL, July 30.—The export trade in Canadian grain from the Montreal market today was quiet owing to the somewhat limited demand from foreign buyers and the fact that the prices bid were in most cases below working basis with the result that only sales of odd loads of oats and barley were made. There was a demand from New York exporters for No. 1 northern spring wheat and sales of odd loads on spot were made at 1-1/2 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg July option C. F. Montreal; and this price was also asked for lots for shipment from Fort William there was also some business transacted in oats and barley at C. F. prices. The demand for ocean grain from the continent was better and the tone of the market was stronger at an advance in rates, engagements to Antwerp Hamburg and Rotterdam being for August loading at fourteen cents per 100 pounds F. O. B. wheat at fifteen cents per 100 pounds for barley and at seventeen cents per 100 pounds for oats. The spot market for car lots was steady and prices showed no further change. Little business was transacted in flour but prices remained firm. The mill-fed situation was normal with a fairly good demand. A fair trade was done in rolled oats and the tendency was steady. There was no improvement in the egg market, prices being unchanged under a quiet demand. Extreme dullness marked the trade in butter and cheese but prices were steady.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 30.—The market remains steady with receipts normal and only equal to demand. Indications are that there will be no increase in receipts at the present time one car of second was reported sold Montreal at 28c. P. O. B. Montreal. Eastern American markets remain unchanged. Toronto steady. Jobbing specials 42, extras 40, firsts 37, seconds 33 to 34.

MONTREAL, July 30.—The slight easing off tendency in the market which was noticeable earlier in the week has disappeared to the cooler weather, dealers are paying extras 35 1-2, firsts 32 1-2, seconds 28, Vancouver and Victoria prices remain the same, production and receipts in Victoria heavier than local consumption surplus stocks being shipped to Vancouver.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. ANNA MURPHY

EASTPORT, July 6.—The unexpected death early Sunday morning of Mrs. Anna (McInnis) Murphy, wife of Dr. John L. Murphy of this city, came as a shock and great surprise throughout the city where she had been so well known for a number of years since coming to Eastport as a graduate nurse and having followed her profession until two years ago when she had been married to Dr. Murphy, one of the leading physicians here.

For the past two weeks Mrs. Murphy had been a patient at the Hutchinson hospital in the northern part of this city, where her infant baby had died last week ago. While Mrs. Murphy had been critically ill during the past week, and had been attended by Dr. Gray and Dr. Bunker of Calais, her condition had somewhat improved and her sudden passing away Sunday morning caused sorrow throughout this city as she had always been held in the highest esteem and had a host of friends and acquaintances. She was a devoted member of St. Joseph's Catholic church from where the funeral services and requiem high mass will be conducted Tuesday or Wednesday morning and will be largely attended. —Eastport ex.

(Mrs. Murphy above referred to was formerly Miss Anna McInnis, a daughter of Mr. Gallen McInnis, of East Point, P. E. I.)

ter than ever before in the history of the cod trade.

Fishermen are suspicious of the instructions which their companies send out, but they are usually ready to accept advice which originates with the government.

"They are beginning to realize that to follow the government's suggestions means greater returns to them eventually."

Widespread interest in fish which has been salted and hard dried, Mr. Whitman sees possibilities in the fast freezing treatment devised at the St. Andrew's station. "It means that the fish prepared in the new way can be delivered in better condition than that now sent to Montreal, for example, packed in ice, according to the present procedure," he said. "When this can be done economically, fresh fish can be sent all over the world."

"Another who views the Halifax project with enthusiasm is Arthur Boustiller, of the National Fish Company, which specializes in fresh and smoked fish. Establishment of a College of Fisheries, analogous in scope to the Dominion Experimental farms, is one of the three factors which together can force the industry in Nova Scotia alone from 10 million dollars to 50 million dollars, within ten years, according to a carefully prepared scheme which he has advocated.

Interesting Report Of European Tour By Island Lady

PARIS (By Miss Hannah L. Keefe, a Native of Morell, P. E. I.)

We have been looking forward to our visit to Paris, which is our last stop before sailing for Ireland. We arrived here Friday evening, July 3rd, just in time to celebrate the 4th. It was pouring rain, not a very auspicious entry to the city of the bright lights. It rained for two days, Saturday and Sunday; this did not prevent us, however, from making the sight-seeing trips. The Franco-Belgium Tours Co. supply the autos and guides. On Saturday we visited the Versailles Palace and went all through the building, to the Hall of Mirrors, where the Peace Conference was held and the Hall of Peace where the treaty was signed. Also the private apartments of Marie Antoinette and Louis XVI. saw the broad staircase where the mob entered adoring the French revolution and the window where Marie Antoinette stood and offered her soul, the young Dauphin, to the people of France. The Palace of Versailles was built by Louis XIV. and there is not a room in the whole palace that does not contain several paintings and busts of himself. The gardens, fountains and everything here are magnificent. It is now used as a national museum. We next visited the Little Trianon, where Marie Antoinette used to retire with her maids of honor to escape from the safety and duties of the French Court life. Here she used to play dairy maid, make butter and grind corn. The gardens are arranged like a miniature farm, where she could be free and play. We next visited Malmaison, the home of Josephine, and also of Napoleon before he divorced her. We could not enter the palace, however, and only saw the grounds and outside of the palace. The next morning, Sunday, it was raining "pitchforks,"—we started out, nevertheless, and visited a half dozen churches, the Church of the Madeleine, the Pantheon, Note Dame St. Gervais. The last named is the church that was bombed by the Germans on Good Friday, March 29, 1918, killing 65 persons. The hole in the roof has been repaired but we could see the holes made by the explosion in the paintings and pictures on the walls. There has been a monument erected in the church in memory of the victims and all their names engraved on the walls. We next visited the Church of the Invalides which is one of the most historical places in Paris. Here reposes the body of Napoleon 1st in a magnificent tomb, very much like the tomb of President Grant in New York and built on the same lines. The Invalides are great long buildings covering three sides of a square. The centre of the square is the Court of Honor where Napoleon decorated his troops for bravery. On all sides of the square are canons and war trophies of all kinds, some of the recent war, and some of the cannon which Germany took from France in the war of 1870, and which have been returned to France since the last war, after having remained in front of the Kaiser's Palace in Germany all those years! The Church of the Invalides was first built as a hospital and home for wounded soldiers of France but is now a national museum. The church which is part of the buildings constitutes two chapels, one for the soldiers and one of the royal family, and which are divided by an altar in the centre, on one side of the altar the soldiers were buried. Here, also, reposes the bodies of two brothers of Napoleon. The tomb of Napoleon cost 2,000,000 francs. It is easy for the observer to realize how the French nation worshipped and still worships Napoleon by the amount of money spent in monuments, arches and buildings to his memory. Napoleon, however, reposes alone in his tomb. Josephine is buried in the Palace of Versailles and Marie Louise is buried in Austria.

No need to tell your reader that Paris is the most beautiful of all the cities we have seen. The wonderful broad boulevards and immense squares. There is no such street in any American city as the Champs Elysee in width or beauty. The centre of the street is as wide as Van Ness Avenue with a park and two rows of trees on either side, and then a wide street on each side outside of that and then wide sidewalks. What impresses me most is the amount of space occupied by the wide streets, squares, gardens, etc. It is laying out Paris they did not seem to value land as we do in American cities.

Last night we attended the opera in the Grand Opera House. To see that inside of the Opera House is well worth the price of admission. We had a Russian Ballet and a short opera entitled "The Enchanted Night." Very good. This afternoon we went to visit the Louvre Gallery, tomorrow morning we leave here for Cherbourg, from whence we sail on the S.S. America for Ireland, to which I look forward with great joy. It is the land where my father was born and which I have always longed to see.

For a vast improvement in the technique of smoking alone, Mr. Bent'ner said: "We put the most experienced men we can find in charge of our smoking process. As a rule the product is uniform but it frequently happens that defective uniform conditions, a batch turns out poor in color or in texture and has to be rejected. We want to know what the explanation is."

Frank Editorials In London Press On Bryan's Life

LONDON, July 30.—A harsh recapitulation of William Jennings Bryan's career appears in a London Times editorial today. The editorial says in part:

Mr. Bryan's career as Secretary of State in the early days of the war revealed his utter incapacity to conduct large political questions, as was likewise revealed in the Mexican question. When there was talk of Mr. Bryan coming to lecture in Europe early in 1914, Walter Hines Page, the American Ambassador to Great Britain, wrote to Col. E. M. House, "It would take years for the American Ambassador to recover the ground lost if Bryan carries out his plan."

"By his retirement after the sinking of the Lusitania, he delivered the world from very serious dangers."

George Morris Bosworth, Chairman Canadian Pacific Steamships, who died in London, England, on the morning of July 26th, from septic poisoning following an operation for appendicitis. He was 68 years old, had been with the Canadian Pacific Railway since 1892 and was head of the Steamship service for nearly seven years.

LONDON, July 30.—Aside from his eloquence, the London editorial writers do not attribute any degree of greatness to William Jennings Bryan, in whom they see emotionalism as the outstanding characteristic, but admit his sincerity and personal magnetism.

The Morning Post says his life story illustrates at once the power and weakness of mere eloquence. "Bryan's silver speech," it adds, "could not match the golden silence of such a man as Coolidge. It is characteristic of American psychology that the sensibility to the charm of Bryan's oratory was combined with criticism and dissatisfaction."

The Daily Telegraph says: "He was never a thinker; he was an emotionalist. Sentimentalism was the explanation of such success as he achieved as a politician, and sentimentalism is also a sufficient explanation of why he never reached the supreme goal of his long endeavors, for there is a great saving reserve of common sense in America."

The Westminster Gazette sees in Mr. Bryan "a rather incredible figure, but with fine fervor and sincerity that compel respect."

It adds: "He must be reckoned among those who taught America to consider her duties in relation to the rest of the world. He was above all a preacher, rather than a practical politician."

The News says: "His intellectual equipment was almost negligible. He was a hopeless administrator and an impossible colleague, and although in private life honest and well meaning, these are not qualities that ordinarily raise men to a great place. His whole life was spent in leading a false cause."

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 28. (A.P.)—Clarence Darrow and J. T. Scopes, here yesterday commented on the death of William Jennings Bryan.

Mr. Darrow's statement follows: "Mr. Bryan was a man of very extraordinary powers as a speaker and campaigner, but in any cause in which he believed. "I always considered him fairly honest in his opinions and very able and brave in their defence. He was essentially a crusader. He was not a philosophical turn of mind, but, especially an advocate of causes."

Mr. Scopes said of Mr. Bryan: "Bryan's death represents the death of a great force in economics and politics in the United States. Whether one agreed with all of his ideas and principles matters little at this time. Honor must be paid to Mr. Bryan for his fearless stand on issues that he thought were right."

ready done, is the opinion of R. I. Williams, of the Halifax office of the Liverpool concern. "The packers have been told what to do to avoid the discoloration of dried lobster meat," he declared. "The research at St. Andrew's 'xed the cause definitely. "It is poor policy if the packers do not adopt the advice. "One can of blackened lobster may close a market. Every tin should be an advertisement, and it costs little more to assure this. The lobster industry may be developed enormously, Mr. Williams points out. Despite the fact that he lobster ranks near the top in value in the Canadian catch of seafood for this coast, the annual pack is only 150,000 cases. "This means that if half the population of Canada ate lobster, the entire output would supply only three cases a year to each individual. "As things are the supply goes to the tables of the wealthy in Europe and the United States. "But adequate protection of lobster fry, and possibly with the establishment of permanently protected breeding grounds in the rears of the coast known suitable, would be a necessary forerunner of development of this point, the leader added.

The attitude of the fish interests is perhaps best revealed by the fact that the different companies are freely exchanging ideas, and are assisting the efforts at the station to standardize any method which shall be proven satisfactory. "We might keep for ourselves any process in which we have confidence, and which might benefit our competitors one of them told me. "But we are not going to do that. We are quite willing to tell everything we know."

Offers Prayer To End Corn Borer

CHATHAM, Ont., July 30.—Farmers in the Roman Catholic parish of Big Point are praying to God for the extermination of the corn borer, the destructive grub which has multiplied to an alarming extent and which threatens to totally destroy the corn crop.

Sunday afternoon, more than 100 people, the majority farmers and their sons followed Rev. Father Joseph Emery around the parish. At the four corners of the parish the procession was halted while the priest offered prayers. They returned to the church, where a special service of prayer was held.

Farmers left their harvest fields yesterday to attend another special service of prayer in the Big Point church.
