Developing More Efficient Poultry Breeds At C.E.F.

Progress was made during 1948 with three new breeds of chickens being evolved at the Poultry Division, Experimental Farms Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture, a large white breed, a broad-breasted white breed, and a small white, plump breed.

The large white breed is being bred to combine in one bird the greatest number of desirable characteristics from several different breeds. High market quality, with less emphasis on egg production, is the main aim behind development of the broad-breasted white breed. The third bird is being bred as a small, plump breed with the minimum body size required to produce large numbers of standard size eggs, so that maximum production may be obtained on the smallest possible outlay of feed.

Each of the three breeds showed increased egg production during the year, that of the large white breed approaching the performance figures for standard Banded Rocks. Uniformity of type is also more evident in the pullets raised during 1948, but further selection work for uniformity of type and increased egg production must be done. The scientists also aim to get a white rather than a brown or tinted egg in all three breeds.

A considerable amount of crossing has been carried on using the broad-breasted white breed. Not only does it have excellent breast conformation itself but when crossed with standard breeds it seems to improve the breast conformation of those breeds.

Gains were made in egg size and uniformity of type for the small white breed. The greatest difficulty encountered was a somewhat higher mortality figure for the chicks, but more careful attention to management factors promises to improve this situation.

The Brownies have been silent for a longer time than they should, but that does not mean that they have not been busy. At Christmas they put on a play "The Lost Brownie Smile" It was in three acts. The second act was a dream in which there were 7 flowers, a red mail box, a Santa Helper, and three little kittens, a pop corn, a wish fairy, Lady Moon, the sleepy time Fairy and a Brownie. This play was hard work but well done, and everyone seemed to like it. Since then we have had only two meetings but at the last one the following girls received their Recruit Pins, Frances Anderson, Marilyn Carr, Phyllis MacMillan, Laura Bernard, Eva Perry, Susan Morrison.
