BRITAIN'S MILITARY STRENGTH.

The British military manoeuvres which are to begin on Monday next will be regarded with close attention not only in the United Kingdom and throughout the Empire, but by the European countries which have reason to be interested in the shifting balance of military strength.

The operations will mark an epoch in British military history, as they will be a measure of Secretary Brodrick's plans for the reorganization of the army. The report of the commission which has inquired into the affairs of the War Office has aroused a feeling of indignation over the dangers to which the nation has been exposed through neglect and incompetence on the part of those in authority. The state of affairs which has developed is roundly condemned both in the press and in Parliament. Military experts are unsparing in denunciation, and not a few have amply revenged past affronts in dilating on the revelations of the report. Mr. Brodrick's schemes, too, have been quite as roundly condemned as the conditions which made a plan of reorganization necessary. The leading military men in Parliament have expressed the opinion that the changes proposed will result in little or no improvement. The military manoeuvres will in consequence be followed with special interest as affording a test of the War Secretary's plans.

They will be carried out on an extensive scale. The line of battle will extend about 100 miles, and in the front presented all the modern military devices and movements will be fully and severely tested. The military automobile, the captive balloon, the bicycle, in fact all the inventions which have been made available for military purposes will have a test which will be the nearest practicable approach, in time of peace, to the conditions of actual warfare. The leading officers who have gained experience in the South African war will fill important positions. It was made evident early in that war that mechanical inventions had far outstripped military adaptability. The methods which had developed and had proved successful in the days of the small arm of short and uncertain range, clung tenaciously in every branch of the service. A complete revolution in methods was necessary, and it was hastened by some of the early disasters. While improvements in the implements of war have necessitated relative changes in military manoeuvres, new conditions less obvious but perhaps more important in their results have arisen in the social and industrial life of the country, causing relative changes in the material available for the ranks. The manoeuvres will be subjected to the severest criticism from all points of view, and on their success will largely depend the verdict of both people and Parliament on the War Secretary's plans for military reorganization.—A.X.

PROFESSOR FLETCHER AND THE WEEDS.

In connection with the weed show which will be a feature of the coming Exhibition Prof. Fletcher writes to Rev. Father Burke whose idea it is, as follows:

Central Experimental Farm
Sept. 7, 1903.

DEAR FATHER BURKE:
I have been away in the West and since my return have been very busy indeed owing to the absence of most of our staff and endless conventions and excursions to the farm. Prof. Robertson's illness has upset all our plans for a P. E. I. trip this autumn; but I shall certainly try my utmost to carry out our Weed tent arrangement and we will then show the green weeds as well as dried ones. Unfortunately your letter of 15th was not given me at once on my return; but I have every hope of being able to get down for the Exhibition. I will write to you again in a few days, as soon as I can see the Minister.

Yours Truly,
J. Fletcher.

Doubtless Dr. Fletcher who is a scientist of wide repute and a splendid speaker will attend the fair and the farmers should bring in the weeds for identification and hear the valuable lectures.

It is to be hoped that the telegram sent to the Acting Minister of Railways Hon. Mr. Fielding by the united Council of the Board of Trade will have some effect in impressing on the minds of the Government the unanimity of the business men of Charlottetown regarding the site for the new railway station. The Guardian has always contended for its location at the foot of Great George Street and now that citizens are generally agreed upon that location there appears to be no reason why sufficient influence should not be brought upon the powers at Ottawa to have it placed where it will be satisfactory to the public.

BE QUICK.

Not a minute should be lost after a child shows symptoms of cholera infantum. The first unusual looseness of the bowels should be sufficient warning. If immediate and proper treatment is given, serious consequences will be averted. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is the sole reliance of thousands of mothers and by its aid they have often saved their children's lives. Every household should have a bottle at hand. Get it today. It may save a life. For sale by all druggists.

It is distant from Charlottetown by road about 15 miles, is quite near to the Tracadie railway station, and fronts on the St. Peter's and Mill Cove roads and a large water residence, and stables and barn in one building, giving ample accommodation for everything in connection with farm operations. A good carriage road extends from the ground to the lot of the barn. A large well adjoins the house. These buildings are all comparatively new and of the best construction. Pure water from a never failing spring is brought to the residence and stable by underground pipes laid by an engineer from Montreal.
