SKYWAY LOVERS

Watching Radman

Splane's cold, gray eyes watched Radman. Yes, he was a handsome, dapper, well-dressed chap, and he had poise, and a sense of humor. Cold blooded, though. How many men had he put on the spot in the old prohibition days? Splane could not even imagine. If the death of this woman were a necessity, then Radman could see it was done!

Lefty shifted nervously. He paced up and down. "I tell you, boss, I knew it was a mistake to take this ship!" Lefty could not forget that. "It serves us right for going 'legit.' I knew something would happen the moment we did! All this stuff about owning breweries! Give me a good 'alky' plant any time, in an alley. That's a nice safe business compared with this!"

"Has anybody here any ideas as to what might have happened in that ship tonight?" Splane's voice broke in on ten troubled thoughts of the group. There was silence.

"Did any of you notice anything unusual?"

They all agreed it had been an uneventful trip.

More Suspicious

Splane, glaring at them, felt certain one of them had done the murder—the stewardess might have had a hand in it. Or that blond! Seh certainly acted excited enough. At least one of the pilots had to be flying the ship. He could count one of them off, at any rate.

The inspector straightened his shoulders. No use wasting good time until he found out just where he stood. Then he could come back at these people and see just what their stories were. "Now, we're going to the hotel."

The policewoman brought the women in and the party started out into the waiting room. Cameras flashed. Newspaper men swarmed about.

"Not now, boys," Splane was saying. "Just give me a chance. I don't know anything. Not yet. Give me a little time! You know I'll be square with you when I have anything."

The detective herded the frightened people into cars, while Splane talked to the gentlemen of the press.

"Is it true Bradley is traveling with his secretary?" asked somebody. "Wonder how his wife will like that!"

"Now, boys, his is strictly a business trip. He had an appointment at 8 A. M. and worked too late to catch the 11 o'clock train out of New York."

"Oh, yea?" said a reporter. There was a general laugh.

"And this Radman and his bodyguard——"

"What about the beautiful blond?"

"I say that red-headed stewardess did it!" said another.

"Are you holding them all?"

Splane's Plan

Splane explained his plan. He would begin taking statements later in the day. For the present, he was just trying to find out where he stood.

"I can't go at them now, because I'm not sure how she was killed," he added. "I'll know in a few hours."

Alison would never forget that ride to the hotel. The three women were in one car with Miss Pringle, the policewoman.

"I think they'll give us adjoining rooms," said Miss Pringle. "One of you can room with me, the other two together."

At the hotel they all waited in the car until one of the detectives arranged for the rooms. Then they were taken directly from the street floor in an elevator to the twentieth floor, nonstop. Where the men were taken, Alison did not know, but the four women found themselves in adjoining bedrooms.

"I'll take Miss Burns with me. She's in terrible shape," the policewoman told Alison. "Maybe I can find out something," she added in a lower tone.

Alison nodded. She and Mona were assigned one room. Too exhausted to sleep, the two girls threw themselves on the twin beds. But to remain silent, sleep was impossible. And they found words even more difficult. It was daylight and Mona ordered coffee. While she was waiting for it she paced up and down the room in indecision. Twice she went to the telephone, once she picked it up. When the operator came on the line she asked for the correct time. She offered Alison no explanation for all this. Then she threw herself on the bed and wept silently. Alison felt sorry for her, but she could think of nothing to say to comfort her.

When the coffee came they both had some and Alison felt better. "Let's try to sleep. We'll have to face the inspector again in a few hours, and we'll be in no condition."

Mona only shook her head. Alison did manage to sleep for a while, but Mona, crying and then pacing up and down the room, kept awakening her. The girl seemed desperate. Alison wondered why. Certainly she had had nothing to do with this business!

Odd how a calamity involves so many innocent people. Then Alison's thoughts went back to Roerden. She tossed restlessly. Finally she fell into a heavy, troubled sleep.

Learn the Meanings of Odd Dreams

Heed Messages Dreams Bring

Virginia shivers in her sleep! She's alone in a bleak Arctic region. Chill winds sweep down from an iceberg. Polar bears look at her menacingly!

Because she is chilly, the scene of her dream is a polar region, but the real basis of her dream is mental distress. Lately her fiance has appeared cold and distant. Once she caught what seemed to be a look of dislike in his eyes.

Her waking mind hasn't dared to face the situation which comes to life in her dream. If she understood that dream, she might realize it was wiser to talk things over frankly with the man she loved.

Psychologists say many of our dreams are messages from our unconscious minds, warning us to face our problems.

Perhaps you have dreamed you were falling from a great height? Of struggling vainly to get through a locked door? Learn what these curious dreams mean. In our 32-page booklet a famous psychologist tells how to interpret your most fantastic dreams, gives meaning of dream symbols, tells how dreams express wishes, conflicts. How they relate to our personal life.

LIFE

Life is too brief
Between the budding and the falling leaf,
Between the seed time and the golden sheaf,
For hate and spite,
We have no time for malice and for greed;
Therefore, with love make beautiful the deed;
Fast speeds the night.

Life is too swift
Between the blossom and the white snow's drift,
Between the silence and the lark's uplift,
For bitter words.
In kindness and in gentleness our speech
Must carry messages of hope and reach
The sweetest chords.

Life is too great
Between the infant's and the man's estate,
Between the clashing of earth's strife and fate,
For petty things.
Lo! we shall yet who creep with cumbered feet
Walk glorious over heaven's golden street,
Or soar on wings!

How Can I ??

(By ANNE ASHLEY)

Q. How can I clean white silk lace?

A. It should be washed and rinsed in benzine, dried in the open air, and pressed between sheets of white paper. This same method can also be used on cotton lace. CAUTION: Benzine is inflammable.

Q. How can I draw an extreme'y stubborn splinter from the flash?

A. Take elder-root and the seed of Jamestown-weed; fry it in lard, and apply. It is claimed that this will draw any splinter from the flesh.

Q. How can I lubricate the food grinder, juicer, or any other similar kitchen device and avoid disagreeable taste or smell of oil?

A. Use a drop or two of glycerine.

Suede Gloves

To clean suede gloves, first put on the glove; then rub briskly all over it with a stale bread crust with about an inch of crumb to it, changing the bread when it becomes soiled. Pipeclay well rubbed in is the best method for cleaning white suede gloves.

Egg Plates

One should always use cold water in cleaning plates on which eggs have been served. A pinch of salt added to the water also helps. After the egg has been removed, use hot water and soap.

THE COOK'S CORNER

Pineapple Marshmallow Cream

1-2 lb. colored marshmallows
1 cup crushed pineapple
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups whipping cream
2 teaspoons sugar

Method: Cut the marshmallows into small pieces and mix them with the pineapple. Set this in the refrigerator for several hours, until it begins to jelly.

Whip the cream until it holds its shape and add the vanilla and the sugar, stirring until the sugar is dissolved. Fold this into the pineapple marshmallow mixture lightly.

Turn into a tray of the refrigerator and freeze as rapidly as possible until firm, although this is one of the frozen desserts that is good when it is served before it is firm. Serve with little grated sweet chocolate over the top of each plate.

Peppermint candy ice cream is one of my favorites, and it's not an expensive cream either. Try to get that porous peppermint stick candy for it has more flavor and also a pretty pink color when it is dissolved.

We All Need To Get Away — Dorothy Dix — Take Your Vacation Apart

Husbands and Wives Will Appreciate Each Other More if They Take Their Vacations Away From Each Other — They Appreciate Each Other All the Greater

The vacation season is upon us. The landscape blossoms forth in gorgeously colored railroad and steamship folders. So the annual husband-and-wife wrangle starts over the relative merits of seaside and

Now a vacation is more than a pleasure. It is a duty that we owe not only to ourselves, but to mountains, and farmhouses versus swanky resorts. those with whom we live, and to our jobs. No family can stand being together, caged in the small confines of a home, for a year without getting on each other's nerves. No man and woman can do the same work over and over again for 365 successive days without losing their pep and enthusiasm in it and coming to regard it as a chore instead of a career.

Probably the greatest modern discovery is the vacation, but not all of us have found out what it is all about, and that it doesn't matter where we go or what we do, just so we get a change. For what we need is to break away from our routine for a little while, to go somewhere where we will see different sights, meet different people, eat different food, get something new to think and talk about. Most of all, we need to get away from the people with whom we are thrown in intimate contact all the time. And this goes for husbands and wives, no matter how devoted they are to each other.

Unfortunately, however, there are wives who do not realize this and who feel it is their duty never to leave their husbands even for a week-end, or to take a vacation if their husbands can't go along with them. They have not perception enough to see that they would be giving their husbands a perfectly royal treat just to break the home routine and leave them by themselves for a few days, with no one to boss them, or tell them not to drop cigarette ashes on the floor, or to want to know WHY they didn't come home to dinner on time.

A man who is the victim of one of these porous-plaster, non-vacationing wives says: "Suppose a man has a business that he hasn't been able to leave for a vacation for years and years. His wife won't leave him to take one herself, though he has urged it on her almost with tears. Suppose he had got so fed up looking at her sitting across the table three times a day and listening to the same chatter from her, and he has never got off for a night in years without her tagging along with him. Don't you think it would be admissible for him to go to a hotel and stay for a week and have a solitary vacation in order to avoid a nervous breakdown? Because he can't stand the sameness any longer."

I certainly do. And I certainly think that every wife should be fair enough and generous enough to her husband to give him a break and not force him to take his vacation with her and spend it doing the things she wants to do instead of the things he longs to do himself.

Even when husbands and wives are congenial and all-in-all to each other, as the phrase goes, they are better off for a little separation now and then. For when they come together after an absence they have freshness and novelty for each other and the joy of reunion that strengthens the tie between them. Habit rubs even domesticity thin. A man who is used to his well-kept home ceases to appreciate it. The woman who is married to a good provider takes her luxuries as a matter of course without even say "thank you." A husband and wife who are together all the time talk out and come to bore each other.

But let them be parted, and when the vacation is over they see each other and their surroundings with different eyes. The husband is once more a Fairy Prince instead of a paunchy, middle-aged man. The wife a Glamor Girl instead of a fretful housewife losing her figure. Home is the dearest place on earth and the children angels instead of brats.

Much has been said of the selfishness of wives who go off on vacations and leave their husbands at home. Perhaps they are kinder and wiser than they know in giving them a chance for a little vacation of their own. At any rate, it is observable that the Summer widower seems to bear his wife's temporary absence with great fortitude.

The moral of all of which is that every wife should take a vacation and give her husband one. But the success of it is in the timing. She should make it just long enough for him to get tired of staying up at nights past 10 o'clock and eating restaurant food, and not long enough to find out that he can get along without her.

Dear Dorothy Dix—Do husbands ever fall out of love with the Other Woman? My husband and I have been married for ten years. I have worked hard outside of the home to help him make money and get a start, and inside of it in making him a happy and comfortable home. Together we have built up a good business, are well off and could be so happy except that he has fallen in love with the woman next door, who has a devoted husband and a darling son. Her husband is as heartbroken over the affair as I am and says he will fight to the finish. But I don't know what to do. My husband sits and daydreams every minute he is in the house and has nothing to say to me, and seems so miserable. Shall I give him up, or stick it out? I am one of those women who could be satisfied with half a loaf. NORA BELLE.

Answer:

Of course, men get tired of the Other Woman just as they do of their wives. The man who is fickle enough to weary of good and faithful wife is virtually certain to lose his taste for the charmer who has turned his fancy for the moment.

I think that the wife who loves her husband and wants to keep him makes a great mistake in not putting up a fight to the death for him when she finds another woman poaching on her preserves. I believe that if wives did this that, nine times out of ten they would win out. But the average wife does not raise a finger to defend herself. She simply throws up her hands, surrenders and lets herself be robbed of her most precious possession.

Whether this is because she is so hurt and dazed by the discovery that the man she has loved and trusted, and whose affection for her she has never doubted, has ceased to care for her and is unfaithful to her, or whether she is desperate thinking there is nothing she can do about it, nobody knows.

Probably her apathy is due to the strange belief that wives seem to have that the Other Woman is possessed of some mysterious powers of fascination against which a man is powerless to resist, and that no man could ever weary of one or grow bored with one. All of which is, of course, nonsense. She is just an ordinary woman, often no better looking or younger or cleverer than the wife and no easier to get along with. And, given time and close association and having to pay her bills, the man will be just as disillusioned with her as he is with his wife. Or more so.

Most philanderers come home in sack cloth and ashes and bearing gifts of propitiation in their hands to the wives who have thought them worth fighting for.

THEY CAN WALK

The roads were icy, and an elder of the kirk had lost his footing and was struggling to rise when the minister came along.

"Ah, John," he remarked, facetiously, "the wicked walk in the slippery places."

"So I see," replied John drily, "but I canna manage it."
