HOW LIGHT PRODUCES THE DIFFERENT COLORS

The blue of the sky and the blue of the human and animal eye are caused by the action of light. In the first place the dust in the air causes the dispersion of the light and its decomposition into its component parts, while in the case of the eye it is due to the presence of finely divided particles suspended in the liquid medium of the iris. Green, brown and black eyes take their color from a combination of this light dispersion effect and the presence of actual color in the eye.

Flowers and fruits owe their color principally to the presence of pigments in them although in the case of the lily, the white color is due to the structural make-up of the petals. Of course the number of different coloring matters in nature is very great, but probably the most interesting and most important of these substances are the anthocyanins, which produce some of the most beautiful effects. It has been found that the color of the flower of the fruit depends not only on the presence of certain other substances such as tannin or iron salts. Then again the color will vary according to whether the anthocyanin is present in the fruit or flower either in the free or combined state.

A few examples cited in the Scientific American show how the color effects in natural products with the presence of different anthocyanins. Thus cyanin is responsible for the coloring of the cornflower although it is present only in the proportion of 0.7 per cent. But when it occurs in as high a proportion as 14 per cent it produces a dark red coloration as in the garden variety of this flower.

When occupying the pastorate of a Western church in his early career, a well-known minister had a deacon whose character had always been above reproach until a certain prayer meeting which followed a sermon, during which the elder had roundly slumbered.

"Will Brother Jones kindly lead?" was asked by the pastor. Waking with a start at mention of his name, the deacon almost broke up the service my replying: "I led last time; it's your turn. What's trumps?"

TO THE ELECTORS OF QUEEN'S COUNTY:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

After determined persuasion on the part of a large number of the Electors of Queens County I have decided to allow my name to come before the Federal Conservative Nominating Convention on December 9th as one of the representatives for the County. I have been in local politics for the past twenty one years during which time I have run five elections gaining each and every one, serving under six Premiers and assisting in giving the people of this province the best laws on our Statute books. I therefore take this opportunity of soliciting the support of the delegates to the above mentioned convention assuring them that if I am their nominee I will as hitherto put forth my very best efforts to win and if elected I shall be in a much better position to know the wants of the County and to serve their best interests.
