THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

MR. FREDERICK'S WORDS WORRY BARBARA CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Why had Payne Orton had to die? Had he lived, Blanche would still be bound. Dead, it left her free to intrigue my husband.

Mr. Frederick spoke to me. I heard his voice, but I did not grasp anything he was saying. My mind was numb with the thought that had come to me.

Had Payne Orton, before he died, known of the intimacy of his wife and Neil? And had it made him careless of his health?

It was a hysterical woman's thought, but it gripped me. That he had been ill for long, that scarcely ever had he been able to accompany his wife anywhere since I had known them; and this illness might have been caused by an added cold, never occurred to me. As nearly all women would have done, I took his sudden death to mean something to me simply because my husband had shown a preference for the man's wife.

"What are you thinking of, that you won't speak to me?" Mr. Frederick's voice brought me back to a realization of my rudeness.

"Pardon me. I was so shocked by what you told me that I was most impolite. It is dreadful! dreadful!"

Payne Orton's love for his wife was a matter of common comment among his friends. Could it be possible that, because of some intrigue of hers, he had wanted to die? And was Neil the other party to the intrigue?

I tortured myself with the thought. Mr. Frederick was a shrewd man and doubtless understood more of the cause of my answers to his questions than I realized.

Finally he commenced to talk of Neil. Then I pulled myself together. Anything pertaining to my husband was vitally interesting to me.

"He has wonderfully staying powers. We all have to hand it to him for one thing," said Mr. Frederick, "if he makes up his mind to do anything, he will go through fire and water to accomplish it."

I thought I detected some subtle desire to comfort me by this praise of Neil—if it were praise. I would put my pride in my pocket and ask one or two questions.
