for which he could not find a place and 70 pieces of margin and blank paper. Justice Batson examined the large sheet and the additional pieces, and then said, "I don't think you are very good at jig-saw puzzles. I have tried one of the stray pieces and fitted it into the jig-saw at once."
His lordship said the solicitor might make an affidavit, and probate would then be granted of the document as pieced together and completed.
The case was that of Clegg v. England, and concerned the will of Harriet England, formerly of Gooles, Yorkshire.
H. B. Durlay Grazebrook, of The Temple, who was acting in the case, explained in the Court that Mr. Clegg was seeking to obtain probate of the estate. Originally, solicitors prepared a draft will and Harriet England signed the official copy. Some time later she tore her copy of the will into pieces. These, however, were secured, and with the original draft which had been retained, they were presented for probate.

CANADIAN GOODS ON FOREIGN MARKETS

Canadian housewives insist on strong, rather than stylish, curtain rods for their houses and their insistence on quality, together with reasonable prices are the principle reasons why Canadian manufacturers have been able to capture a substantial portion of this trade in Great Britain, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, Tasmania, and Mexico in spite of keen competition from American and German manufacturers.

This interesting insight into the romance of Canadian industry is revealed in a survey recently made by the Produced in Canada Association, (Quebec) Inc., to discover to what extent Canadian goods are purchased abroad. The guiding idea of this investigation was that if people abroad appreciated the price and quality of Produced in Canada merchandise that was a factor which might influence Canadians to give greater support to the products of their own factories.

Insofar as the prosaic curtain rod is concerned Canadian manufacturers have found from experience that the Canadian buyer uses rods of the same style as the characteristic American products but usually for a greater length of time and so demands a stronger and better made article. This demand has been met by the Canadian manufacturer and while satisfying his own customers the manufacturer has strengthened his market abroad.

The Association's survey showed that in Mexico Canadian-made rods compete with American as well as British products; in Great Britain, with American and German made rods; in New Zealand, South Africa and Tasmania, with U. S. A. products.

"There is an interesting angle of this aspect of Canadian trade to Canadians generally. If people abroad find Canadian products so good, both in quality and in price, our own people might well consider buying more Produced in Canada merchandise because, by so doing, they invariably profit in two ways; in their own pockets and by the creation of more employment which eventually increases national as well as individual prosperity."

WILL TATTERED, TORN & CONSTRUCTED BY JUDGE

LONDON, August 26 (By The Canadian Press)—Justice Sir Alexander Dingwall Bateson, of the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, proved himself an expert in jig-saw puzzles in the Probate Court recently when a will was produced that had been torn into 163 pieces. The solicitor producing it said he had stuck a number of pieces on a large sheet of paper, but he had been able to place correctly only 78 of the fragments. There were 15 pieces of writing
