er from the truth. They were really co-operating to give service and to help one another.

Ever since the beginnings of civilization merchants had been in action distributing the necessities and luxuries of life, and making them easily attainable. If the merchants were taken out of this Province, asked Mr. Robertson, how could they be replaced? They were the biggest employers on the island, and if the money that was sent out of the Province could be kept here they would provide employment for a great many more people.

No tax was paid on the outside merchandise that was brought into the Province, while the local merchants were among the largest contributors to the taxes. If the government could devise a way of taxing this outside merchandise it would mean a great benefit to the Province in general.

Mr. Robertson concluded by expressing the hope that as in the past the spirit of the Retail Merchant would continue in the future to be honesty, honorableness, and usefulness.

Hon. J. H. Myers, Minister of Agriculture, speaking on behalf of the Province, said that so far as the retail and all the merchants were concerned they always had his sympathy and consideration. In the rural parts of the Province the produce dealer and retail dealer were looked upon as a very valuable asset to the community.

The speaker said that he knew that like the farmer, the merchant had his troubles and difficulties and hard times. These were brought about by certain conditions. It seemed that good things had their worse side, and it was his belief he said that the advent of the rural mail delivery had done more than one would think to bring about the immense flow of business to the merchant order houses. This was regrettable from the standpoint of the local merchant and the Province as a whole. But whether the matter was one to be dealt with by the government or the people themselves was something which the speaker was not in a position to decide. He said that he had not gone into the question as to whether or not it was legal to put a tax on goods coming into the Province from outside houses. This could only be done, he thought, by all the provinces acting together.

Mr. Myers said he believed however that a good educative campaign among the people would bring good results. After all there was nothing so good as advertising. The people should be shown what they were doing by sending money abroad, they should be educated to the fact that men follow money, as there were twice as many merchants doing business in the Province it would go a long way to building up a prosperous state of affairs.

People perhaps had the idea that they could do business with outside houses cheaper than at home, but they should remember that no business could be run without a profit. He compared the problem of the merchant with that of the farmer and pointed out that through co-operation the latter had found a solution to many of his. The Potato Growers Association was a good instance of the benefits they had gained through co-operative buying, and the speaker thought it might be possible for the local merchants to adopt a similar system.

In concluding he said that speaking from the standpoint of a member of the government anything he could do to help the merchants he would do gladly. It would be helping Prince Edward Island, and he was for P. E. I. first, last and always. It was, he thought, the best province in the Dominion, and though he had travelled all over Canada he had been unable to find anywhere a smarter bunch of men more wide awake to their interests than right here on the island.

Mr. Jones then gave a talk on mutual insurance and the special advantage given by his company to the members of the Retail Merchants' Association. His address was of a technical nature.

Mr. S. A. McLeod, the next speaker, said that the Association was not one to allow the merchant to put up his prices. Some years ago the merchant had been made virtually a tax collector by reason of the system of collection. This had been done away with by the Association.

Mr. Douglas then gave an address on the future policy of the Association and told of some of the things that had been gained for the merchants at the National Convention at Vancouver. An extended report of Mr. Douglas' speech will appear in a later issue.

Mr. George Hughes moved and Mr. LePage seconded, a motion thanking the speakers and those who had provided the entertainment and helped make the evening a success.

Mr. J. O. Hyndman then made a short address telling what was being done to put over the "Buy at Home" campaign. His address provoked a lively discussion among the members and some useful and interesting suggestions were put forth in this respect, among others one suggested by Mr. Hyndman to the effect that the two weekly half holidays be combined and that all business, wholesale houses, and banks close on the same day preferably Saturday. This was received with approval by all present.

Street Committee on being called upon to offer a suggestion by way of reaching a decision, stated that in the first place he had only $1978 to "come and go on" and same is to be used for work already mapped out, but he would do all in his power and render as much service to the section or sections to the best of his ability. After much more discussion on the subject the resolution was withdrawn to be read as "temporary repairs."

Councillor McLeod in the course of the above mentioned the value of ashes on the streets, such as Orlebar, School and Upper Hillsboro Streets. He cited the case very forcibly, emphasizing on the industry of the residents of said streets in spreading and rolling ashes in front of their residences. Orlebar St. for instance, Mr. McLeod said was just as good as our permanent asphalt streets.

The Tenders Committee was then heard from, and after much heated argument the following were passed:

John F. McKenzie, eight overcoats for policemen.

John McLeod, eight uniforms, one pair of pants.

A call is in for tenders for the printing of the city report for 1925.

Councillor Moran moved and was seconded by Councillor Taylor for that a storm sewer be placed on Sydney St. between Great George and Prince Streets to alleviate the water nuisance which occurs at this section from year to year. The resolution was passed.

Before the meeting adjourned His Worship read an invitation from the Retail Merchants Association to join them at the Board of Trade Rooms after their meeting. The invite was appreciated but due to the late hour could not be accepted.

Company, putting them off time after time with temporary agreements to continue the existing service with antiquated ships which cannot be worked economically and which are no credit to so important a Company as the Royal Mail. What the Canadian Government has done is to get our delegates to Ottawa and secure from them valuable concessions in return for a steamer service not so ample as provided for in the existing Trade Agreement, with the addition of a few concessions on fruit which may be valuable to Jamaica, which is in the Western Group of islands with a separate and distinct steamer service, and a concession on sugar which was practically automatically imposed upon Canada by the granting of the stabilized British preference on sugar.

It is at any rate plain that if the new Trade Agreement is to stand we must be provided with the steamer service therein stipulated, and within the stipulated time. Without the service the reciprocity agreement with Canada is almost valueless.
