DOCTOR URGES MEN TO DRESS LIGHTLY

LONDON, Sept. 14.—Well-ventilated minds and bodies have done much to better the condition of modern women, and Dr. E. Graham Little, M. P., advises men to follow in their lead.

Fashion has decreed that women shall be sensibly clad, and it is reasonable that men should be more hygienically clothed, especially in the summer.

Dr. Little says that the habits and costumes of women have immeasurably increased their mental and physical health. Men were the minds and bodies of men so thoroughly ventilated, that the benefit has been surprising.

HOW CAN YOUNG PEOPLE AFFORD TO MARRY?

Condensed from Success Magazine (June '26.) Christine Frederick

The history of race progress is that of constantly pushing ahead the marriage period. You can locate any race or tribe or nation in the scale of development by inquiring, at what age do the young people to be regarded largely as an economy? This effect of civilization is due almost entirely to economic reasons, since civilization appears omic matter, although it is not. In savage tribes, girls of 10 and 12 years are married. Only a few centuries ago, marriages at 16 were very common. Your grandmother and mine married at 18; your mother and mine were doubtless married at 20.

But in the last 25 years America has traversed the space of a century, economically speaking. This is literally true as we created actually more wealth in 1900-1910 than was created between 1800-1900. Therefore, the economic pressure of the first quarter of the 20th century has thrown out of focus all calculations in regard to marriage as in regard to everything else. It has enormously raised the "standard of living," and, true to precedent, this has meant a jump forward of many years, in the age of marrying for young people. This jump forward brings the whole question to the point of a real crisis. We can't forever go on pushing forward the age of marrying for young people. We can't make over God-made young people to fit our man-made economic machine.

Our new standards of wealth are very fine. The amazing opportunities for education in the United States are certainly the wonder of the century. The inventions and devices for comfort and luxury and pleasure are the crown of civilized history. But it is now necessary to stop to ask ourselves what we wish to do concerning the critical pressure that the entire modern scheme of things places, very especially upon young people and the marriage idea. It is just at this point in life that modern civilization shows its greatest weakness.

What we are dealing with is a monstrous and growing artificiality imposed upon the human feelings and instincts of the young. As one of the college boys in the significant play, "Young Woodley," says, "We grow to emotional maturity at 14 or 15, but civilization insists that we forget it and not even think about it until many years later."

I get thousands of letters from my readers all over the country, in all walks of life, and the monotonously same note is in them all: "How can we save anything?" from the young married; "Would you advise us to marry on $1800 a year?" from the engaged couples; "How can I have children and run a home and still stay at work to help my husband?" from the couples who have married and both stayed at work.

A young college instructor friend of mine threw up his job at the university to become a garage mechanic in order that he might marry the girl of his choice. Think of the soul-wrenching of that young man, in giving up his cherished vocation! But he is happier now. He has his home and his mate and he can pay his bills and look forward to having children without terror.

Take, again, the case of a clever relative of mine, a young man certainly capable of becoming a fine surgeon. He is 25, and he went abroad to study. On his return last summer he met a girl—the girl. Now he is in a miserable turmoil of soul, for he must go back to his studies abroad for two or three years more. The girl, whose parents refused to permit an engagement, is attractive and popular, and in his heart the young man knows that likely some other man who has a good income and is on the spot will capture her away from him while he is in Vienna; but worse than that, he knows that even if the three years were up today, he couldn't marry her, for he would have no practice to support a family and even would be in debt for his education. Eight or ten barren years stretch before this young man, when his soul and body cry out for his mate. It is cruel; it is dangerous; it is unsocial. It is a dissipation of fundamental national capital, which is well-mated couples, mated at the mating period and founding families and achieving happiness.

To make matters more crucial, there has developed an additional agent of confusion. Years ago only one and one-half per cent. of the population were "white collar" workers; now the proportion is ten per cent. The laboring man of today can buy 27 per cent. more with his day's work than he could 35 years ago. On the other hand, the office worker has actually suffered a decline, for he actually purchases five per cent. less than he could 35 years ago. When you consider that well-reared types of young people are classifiable under the term "office workers," it is readily to be seen that the marriage situation from this aspect alone is given a painful wallop. Furthermore, the prospects are for this situation to become worse rather than better. Prosperity for laboring men means more education, more young people wanting white collar jobs. It is a fact that 80 per cent. of locomotive engineers' sons go to college, and of course, won't become locomotive engineers.

There is also something to ponder over, when we look at the statistics of women going into business. There are now nearly 11,000,000 women in business, a figure that has doubled in very recent times. This situation is not due merely to woman's desire to become self-supporting. It reflects the sheer preponderance in modern life of money pressure. The great majority of those working women are young girls, who go out from their homes to earn money partly for family support, but even more largely for the purpose of raising their standard of living and luxury. Admirable as this is and valuable as training for life, nevertheless it, too, has added to the difficulties of the mating and marrying time. It has definitely helped to raise the economic standards of expectation at marriage, for many of these young women spend a far greater proportion of their earnings on clothes and luxuries than is possible under any conceivable young family budgeting plan based on the earnings of one young man. Furthermore, with the best of intentions, it tends to make young women undomestic and develops oftentimes a fatal germ of future restlessness with the inevitable marriage condition. That mark of progress and of desire to play a part in the working world may be all true; but again it is marriage which is the target pierced by the arrow.

Young men seem to be held fast, as flies in amber, in the economic pressure which keeps them from marriage until a very late age, when often they lose interest in matrimony. Recent New York statistics indicate that divorces are increasing, while marriages are decreasing. The birth rate is falling among those who are married, and the number of married women who take positions is increasing. There is a steady increase in the average age at marriage. Inevitably, there is a corresponding increase of immorality and free union. In short, if there is any beckoning social and economic problem in the country today, it is, as Mrs. Catt proclaims, the problem of marriage and young people.

Sir Philip Henry Kerr, war-time secretary to former Prime Minister Lloyd George, who, in an interview in New York on Wednesday declared that British capital and Labor are preparing to evacuate the entrenchments in which they have been fighting before and since the war. He blamed the deadlock between British capital and Labor since the war for the continued industrial depression in that country.

For the Brides

Happy indeed is the bride whose thoughtful relatives and friends enlist the aid of Holman's when selecting the wedding gifts.

Ever since 1857 when the dainty bride wore hoop skirts and a poke bonnet with the groom resplendent in tight-fitting coat and elastic straps on the bottom of his trousers—the bridal journey being taken by relays in the old fashioned stage coach—Holman's have been furnishing the homes of good taste and refinement, and particularly the love nest of the Bride.

To-day, times have changed and Holman's merchandise has changed with the times, but back of it all, the principle that it practised in 1857,—"your money's worth, or your money back"—is the same.

HOSPITALITY CENTERS IN THE DINING ROOM

Those who have travelled considerably tell us that our showing of Dining Room Furniture is the best in Eastern Canada, and we have been told it so often that we are beginning to believe it ourselves. Frankly, you will find here some exceedingly attractive values in complete suites and individual pieces for the dining room—the list below is just a small indication.

Then, of course, if your purse does not permit a large purchase, the September Bride will be delighted with a selection from any of the following offerings below:—

- Dinner Sets in Japanese, English and French China.
- Tea Sets in a splendid variety of patterns.
- Cut Glass, real hand work, wonderful workmanship.
- Brass Bowls, etc.

BEDROOM FURNITURE MUST BE DAINTY AND DISTINCTIVE

With the average person, one-third of the day is spent in bed, and the bed-room is a part of the home in which the Bride takes particular pride.

Let us show you our splendid line of bed-room suites ranging in price from $75.00 to $298.00, and a full line of Simmons' Built for Sleep Beds, springs and mattresses.

The HOOVER.

Probably the reason you are not using The Hoover is that you have not seen it in operation. We are looking forward to an opportunity of demonstrating The Hoover on your rug.

You can select for the September Bride an Electric Washer, Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet or a Hoover Vacuum Cleaner, with the certainty that it will stand out among the list of gifts that will give absolute pleasure through all the years to come.

Call in and look over the display we are showing now. Odd Chairs, Tables, Desks, Hope Chests (Cedar), Hall Sets, in fact everything in the Furniture line. All we ask is an opportunity to show you Furniture. If we cannot please you in design or price you'll not be urged to buy.
