LONDON DIMS HER LIGHTS.

All the town now, since the war began, from dusk to dawn, is shrouded in darkness—half the street lights out and the other half under black shades. Blinds and curtains drawn everywhere, awnings let down above shop-windows, the lamps of busses and taxis and trams burning low, not an advertisement light anywhere. Though getting about after dusk has grown perilous, though it is affirmed that the darkness is more fatal than the raid of Zeppelins or Tanbes, I am never in a hurry to go home, often taking the longest way for the sheer wonder of it; to see Bond Street—once on a winter afternoon the most brilliant street in London—as dim as an alley, Piccadilly Circus an island of darkness. Trafalgar Square steeped in gloom, national galleries and museums substantial shadows, theatres and restaurants and hotels opening in funeral gloom, the Strand dull as a Bayswater terrace; and then, as I get nearer home, suddenly over the house-tops, stretching across street and square, the threads and cones and cylinders and shafts and plumes of light pointing north and east, meeting overhead, busy at their task of searching, giving me again the thrill of conviction that they could not search so diligently were there not something to search for—a conviction that London shares but does not allow to interfere with its pleasures, even now that civilians are officially informed how to act when the lights no longer search in vain and the bomb falls. London closes its public houses and goes to bed at ten or eleven its streets are as silent and deserted as the streets of a provincial town.

He was imported from the Old Country to Canada as a yearling and is sired by the great show horse "High Honour" by "Hiawatha." Mr. Roper is to be highly commended on securing such a horse for P. E. HOUSEHOLD HINTS

While the canary is moulting tie a piece of bacon fat in its cage. It is a tonic, and will improve its song. If corks are too large for a bottle soak them in boiling water for a few minutes. When soft they easily enter the bottle.

Before using a new iron saucepan ease it inside and out, and let it stand for 48 hours in hot water in which a large lump of cooking soda has been dissolved.

When washing blouses, handkerchiefs, etc., put a small lump of orris root into the rinsing water, and it will give them a delightful perfume of violet. This is much more lasting than if a sachet is placed amongst the clothes.

An excellent remedy for chapped hands is made by mixing equal parts of glycerine and whiskey together. Keep the mixture in a bottle tightly corked, and rub a little on the hands every night, and they will always be soft and free from dirt.

When gas mantles get smoky and dirty the light becomes poor and the mantles are in many cases taken off and replaced. To remove all smoke and dirt from mantles take a pinch of table salt and sprinkle it into the mantle. It will look as good as new.

To store silver while on holiday, place in a cardboard box a layer of ordinary flour, then lay the forks and spoons upon it, and cover thickly with flour. They will remain quite bright for any length of time.

Perspiration stains may be removed from white blouses without any trouble if they are steeped before washing in cold water to which a little carbonate of soda has been added. Let them soak for a time and then wash in the usual way.

Perforated rubber in cold weather is undoubtedly a keep in the winter. The first and most important thing to consider in carrying out this idea is never to be tightly shod. Boots or shoes that fit closely prevent the free circulation of the blood by pressure; but when, on the contrary, they do not enter the shoe at all, the stocking has a good supply of warm air. The second rule is never to sit in damp shoes. Those whose work lies in offices and elsewhere, and is of a sedentary character, would do well to keep a spare pair of boots handy.

Repeated scalding will often fail to make a sponge sweet and soft, as it was originally. The best thing to do is to take care of it at first. If the sponge is freed from soapuds and hung where it will get dry each time after it is used it will not become sour. In order to do this, wash the soap out with warm water after using it, and rinse it in cold water. Squeeze it as dry as you can with the hands, but do not ring it, as that would break the fibres.

HERE YOU ARE

The pointed corsage is promised for the near future. In jewelry cut steel and cut jet are being combined. Some of the new skirts are picoté around the edge. Tailored costumes for street wear are simply designed.

Coats for sports wear are almost invariably of the army order. The skirts of children's party frocks are usually plaited or flounced. Open and closed neckwear of lace and net is among the favorites. A pretty cotton waist has the fullness shirred in around the waist. Dotted swiss is to be worn in the spring, and so is embroidered organdy.

EPIGRAMS IN DON'TS

Don't censure trifling errors severely. Don't criticise the teacher who preceded you. Don't give commands when you might give suggestions. Don't be strict today and lax tomorrow. Don't punish without explanation. Don't try to teach too much at one lesson. Don't talk too much. Don't think that when you have TOLD your pupils something you have TAUGHT them something. Don't forget that it is your business to teach as well as to hear your pupils recite lessons. Don't fail to encourage your pupils to do their best. Don't drive if you can lead. —Charles R. Stone, in the Journal of Education.

DUCHESS MARRIES

MAN IN TRENCHES.

The widowed Duchess of Sutherland, said to be one of the most beautiful women in Europe, the daughter of an Earl and organizer of a complete ambulance service, which is reported to be doing splendid work in Belgium and France, has recently married a man in the British army.

Known for years as a philanthropist and writer, this picturesque character, in the midst of her red Cross work near the firing line, has had time to contribute many pages to the great London Times History of the War. The censorship, which is the despair of the British forces, which are bearing the brunt of the terrific German assaults. It forms but a single long chapter in the elaborate, current history of the war that is being published by the greatest of European newspapers, the London Times.

With the care that characterizes the editorial work of the London Times, the Liege chapter of "The History of the War," has been carefully edited and reinforced by the celebrated staff of military, naval and diplomatic experts of that newspaper. There are pictures showing exactly how the typical modern fortress at Liege were operated; how the cupolas were raised for firing and sunk again into the ground in such a way that no ordinary cannon could do them any damage. There are pictures also showing the great Krupp siege how enormous projectiles were dropped into the supposedly impregnable Belgian and French forts. Pictures also show the victorious Germans making their entry into the captured Belgian cities.

So much technical knowledge, written in a thoroughly readable manner has been compressed into this "History of the War" that it is very profitable that it will take its place among the military text books as well as in the hundreds of thousands of libraries of persons who insist upon having books of real authority and value.

STORIES OF SOME FAMOUS DICTIONARIES.

The ponderous dictionaries in the English tongue, and the still more weighty ones of Europe, even the famous many volumed etymological index of Larousse, which is the monumental work of all in modern tongues, are more surpassed by the Arabic dictionaries of five hundred years ago, which are still the great authority for students in that language. The Arabic dictionary made up by scholars who are familiar with no other language is in twenty quarto volumes and weights close to a hundred pounds. It is all printed in—the Western eye—the curious, crinkly, fly-specked characters of that ancient tongue. There is a fifty-pound ten-volume abridgement of it, presumably for use at home. This and practically all the Arabic dictionaries were made in the time of the "good" Harun-al-Rashid. Each of the things that have been familiar in the daily life of the nomad Arabs for centuries has an enormous number of synonyms. The lion, for example, was feared by villagers and hunted not only for sport, but as a SITTING CROSS LEGGED. The next time you ride in a street car notice the number of people who sit cross legged. It has been estimated that four-fifths of them do. Probably you do. A prominent London physician has investigated the habit, and his advice is, "don't sit cross legged." He states that the prime objection to the habit is that the return flow of blood is stopped at the knee, the result being that the veins in the leg swell up. As all the weight is thrown to one side of the body, under the leg is likely to go to sleep. The body should be equally balanced. Much crossing of the legs is also dangerous in that it is likely to cause lopsidedness. The limbs should be allowed to rest easily so that the flow of blood is natural and the body equally balanced.—"American Boy." Owes All to England.
