In a recent test of 470 cars voluntarily submitted for inspection only 5 per cent were found to be without mechanical defects. This is a significant example of the condition in which motor cars are being used on the highways of this country. At present there is in this province no compulsory inspection of cars, although in all probability a very large percentage of them are a menace to life and property. Every car on the highway should be periodically inspected.

Glorious Memory Of The MacKenzie Pioneers Honored By Descendants

A feature of the MacKenzie Centenary Celebration held on Wednesday, September 17th, at Long Creek, was an historical sketch of the life of Norman MacKenzie, and his wife Catherine MacKay MacKenzie, who arrived on the Island from Scotland, one hundred years ago.

The sketch was compiled by descendants of these pioneers and read by Mr. Malcolm MacKenzie.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

Norman MacKenzie and his wife, Catherine MacKay MacKenzie, came from families who lived chiefly in the Western Isles of Scotland, his native home being Raasay, a detached portion of the Isle of Skye. Both families were typical Highlanders and were closely associated with the life of their respective clans.

Norman was by profession a gardener, and served in this capacity for some years in the employ of one of the Seaforth MacKenzies.

His wife belonged to a family of noted musicians among whom were the famous MacKay pipers. One of these was piper to Queen Victoria; another piper to His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex; and a cousin of theirs, Donald MacKay, was piper until his death in 1894 to His Royal Highness, Edward Prince of Wales.

Other members of their family served for upwards of two centuries in various positions in the Royal household.

Norman MacKenzie with his wife and family sailed from Portree, the capital, at that time, of the Island of Skye, in September of the year 1830.

His family consisted of six of their children: James, Malcolm, Margaret, Mary, Christie, and Jessie.

The third son, Alexander, remained with his grandfather, John MacKay, of Perthshire, Scotland, till the year 1832, when he joined the rest of the family in Prince Edward Island.

Three other children, Christie, Jessie and Flora, were born on the Island.

The family landed on what is now known as Dickieson's Point and remained here with friends while they built their log cabin home on the farm, now owned by Norman's grandson, Alexander MacKenzie, in Long Creek.

They became tenants of the Wright estate, and paid ground rent to the proprietors of this estate until the Act passed under the administration of Hon. Louis Davies (afterwards Sir Louis Davies) forced the proprietors to sell to the tenants their holdings, thus becoming freehold settlers.

Here they remained and on the death of Norman MacKenzie in 1863, his son, Alexander, came into possession of the farm and held it till he sold it to his nephew, Alexander MacKenzie, who is now the owner.

Pioneer Life

The pioneer life in the home of Norman MacKenzie and his wife, resembled closely that of the beautiful example described in Burns' "Gott's Saturday Night", for though both husband and wife enjoyed social merriment, especially when connected with Scotch music and other Scottish associations, they were in the main of a deeply religious and devout turn of mind, and always began the day's work with morning devotions and ended it in like manner.

Real want they never knew, but plain living and high thinking was then the fashion of the day in most homes in Prince Edward Island, and their home was no exception to that rule.

Dainties were not unknown, for the women of Scotland carried from their native land an art of fine cooking peculiarly their own, and there is no doubt a dinner served up by them for a wedding or New Year's celebration would surprise and delight even the guests who are partaking of the last word in good cooking at this centenary.

Nevertheless, it is pretty certain that their regular fare in the early days consisted largely of "the wholesome parritch, chief of Scotia's food," oat cake, good potatoes, and an abundant supply of the best fish in the world. And when they ate their hearty meals they no doubt often sang in the spirit and words of Burns:

What though on hamely fare we dine, Wear hoddie grey and a' that, Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine.

A man's a man for a' that.

The account of one example of heroic endeavour and courage on the part of Mrs. MacKenzie is handed down to their descendants and may be of interest especially to the women and girls who are now accustomed to move easily in nice cars.

The father of the family would start out and walk three miles to a point in Canoe Cove where he would join with friends and row to their fishing nets, where they generally secured a good catch of fish which they landed and cleaned on the beach.

In the meantime, at the home, the mother cared for her children, clothing and preparing for them their morning meal.

Then she extinguished the chimney fire to ensure the safety of the little ones.

After this, she, too, walked the three miles and joined her husband on the shore, and returned with him, carrying her share, which was known as a creel and containing a bushel of green fish, which were salted for the winter.

Lived to a Ripe Old Age

Despite these and other hardships, this vigorous and rugged couple from the Highlands lived to a ripe old age, the husband to reach the age of seventy-five and the wife the great age of ninety years.

The father having around him all his sons and daughters whose history is as follows, the names being in order of age:

James MacKenzie, married Anne Martin, of Uig. They had thirteen children, eleven of whom grew to manhood and womanhood, seven girls and four boys.

Malcolm MacKenzie, married Catherine MacNevin of Argyle Shore. They had ten children, nine of whom grew up, five boys and four girls.

Alexander MacKenzie, remained unmarried.

Margaret MacKenzie, married John Currie. They had five girls and two boys, five of whom grew up, four girls and one boy.

Mary MacKenzie, never married. She made her home always on the home-estate with Alexander.

Christie MacKenzie, married Alexander MacNeill, and was left a widow with three girls in 1860. Shortly after this she returned to her home and here her little ones were all taken away during an epidemic of diphtheria. After this she, too, always made her home along with Alexander and Mary.

Catherine MacKenzie married John A. MacNeill. Ten children were born to them, all of whom, six boys and four girls, grew up.

Jane MacKenzie, married John MacKenzie of Rose Valley. They had seven children, five boys and two girls. This family moved to western Canada many years ago and their recent history is unknown to the committee.

One of their sons was one of the first white men killed in the North-West Rebellion, being enlisted in the first forces organized to suppress the rebels.

Flora MacKenzie, married Hector MacLean. They had twelve children, ten of whom grew up, four boys and six girls.

250 Descendants

Through these children have come a very large number of descendants (including to date seven great, great, great grandchildren) two hundred and fifty of whom are present at this centenary, the total number of friends and relatives present being 158.

Norman MacKenzie not only bequeathed a large number of descendants to his adopted land but he also bequeathed a heritage in the memory and record of his integrity and uprightness of character. This character, we trust, is still being perpetuated and we pray may ever be perpetuated in his descendants. The outstanding slogan of the father to his children was:

"Always regard your honour above the world."

Formal Programme

The first part of the day was spent in the meeting of old and new acquaintances, accompanied by the strains of the bag-pipes, played by Mr. John MacKenzie (a grandson of Norman MacKenzie) and Captain MacDougall of Charlottetown.

This was followed by the writing in a record book of the names of the descendants and relatives of Norman MacKenzie and his wife, present at the celebration.

From one to three o'clock dinner was served.

Then came the following formal programme:

1. Bagpipe Music, "The MacKenzie Highlanders" and "The Campbells are Coming."

2. Address of Welcome, by the host and chairman, Mr. Alexander MacKenzie.

3. Reading of the Historical Sketch and letters of regret and good wishes from absent friends, by Mr. Malcolm MacKenzie, Jr. Letters were read from Dr. James MacKenzie, Battleford, Sask., members of the family of Mrs. Etile Campbell, from California, and other parts of the United States, Miss Jessie McLean, San Diego, Calif., the family of the late Mrs. Norman MacKenzie, of Needham, Mass.

4. Addresses by Hon. Dr. John F. MacNeill and Mayor Lidstone of Summerside, Mr. John MacLeod, of Dundas, and Rev. Norman MacKenzie, of Sussex, N. B.

5. Singing of Auld Lang Syne and other songs.

Address by Dr. MacNeill

Hon. Dr. MacNeill paid a high tribute to the courage of the MacKenzie pioneers in landing in a new country which was then in practically a wilderness state, but they had faith in the country, in themselves, and in their God, and they achieved success. All though they did not amass great wealth they left to posterity a heritage of which any man or woman may feel proud.

Dr. MacNeill said he was born in the adjoining farm, and the first money he ever made was 25 cents which he received for planting potatoes for his uncle, Alexander. The Doctor then repeated verses from Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" as appropriate to the memory of the Long Creek pioneers, men and women of high ideals. He trusted that the historic farm, first owned by Norman MacKenzie, which was now the property of his grandson, would continue to remain in possession of a MacKenzie.

Mayor Lidstone, after fitting reference to the wonderful day and the wonderful gathering, also added his tribute to the pioneers and spoke of the worthy record of the MacKenzie clan. Descendants of Norman MacKenzie and his wife made a name for themselves not only in Canada but in other parts of America.

Mr. John MacLeod of Dundas, a relative on the McKay side, gave some reminiscences of his early days and expressed his pleasure at being present.

AT ROTARY—At the Rotary luncheon yesterday the speaker was Mr. V. A. Bickers, the United States consul for Charlottetown, who gave an interesting address on the United States system of elections. Mr. Bickers pointed out that the functions of the political convention in the United States was somewhat similar to the conventions in Canada. He also explained the system of primaries which some states may select in preference to conventions. At one time there was no control over primaries but in more recent years a control had been exercised. He also explained the present system of voting for a president, through an electoral college, in which the electors of this organization are simply so many rubber stamps to register the popular vote. Prior to 1830 presidents were elected directly by the vote of the people. The system of election of state officers and other officials was also clearly explained. Mr. W. K. Rogers made a few remarks in connection with the Prince Edward Island Hospital drive. President Palmer stated that next year the International Convention will be held in Vienna and that he had appointed an On-To-Vien committee of which Rotarian W.

M. Rowe was chairman. The president further stated that next Tuesday the district governor will visit Charlottetown and after the noon luncheon would meet the directors and the chairman of the various committees. Rotarian Reuben MacDonald who is coming to Charlottetown as governor in the chair stated that the Rotary Club was especially honored by the public address of Mr. Bickers' stay (coming to Charlottetown) as giving before this club.

"Yes - it's a man's Drink!"

Fry's

More men would drink and enjoy FRY'S Cocoa if more women realized that it is a "man's drink" and served it to their husbands and sons. Men are just boys grown up—and where is the male who doesn't like an appetizing cup of FRY'S, with its delicious, chocolaty flavour? For the man who has to work with hands or brain—there is no better health habit than a daily cup of FRY'S COCOA.
