

The Best Laxative He Ever Tried

Mr. W. J. Dorion, New York, writes: "Sick headache, indigestion and constipation have troubled me for years. I tried everything but I can truthfully say your CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS is the best laxative I have ever used. I find that they are small, easy to take and their action does not pain me. They keep me regular and I want to tell you how I appreciate this purely vegetable medicine, knowing, due to my experience in laboratory work that laxatives, containing Mercury, Calomel and other poisonous drugs are injurious."

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are sugar coated, small, easy to swallow, and everyone in the family can take them in perfect confidence as they are a doctor's own formula.

PARADISE

It was something after ten Christie had enjoyed the pleasure of feeding Tony at a family meal, after having gone over her morning's list with him, her afternoon's work with buttons and beads, to his vast and ardent admiration of her supreme efficiency. Impatience for news had kept Tony on tenterhooks from the moment of his return from work, and it was only with great difficulty that he had been able to control himself sufficiently to wait for a call from Sherwood, according to the instructions delivered by Michael Angelo.

But at last the moment had come, and judging by the clatter of tongues in Sherwood's dining room, it was going to be shared by the members of the excursion. Lady George, in a flapper's hat and a skirt of pathetic shortness, was standing, glass in hand as usual, talking through Mortimer Pollock's attempted dissertation on a new life, while Lumley, stirred out of smiling silence, was taking over them both. It was like an argument between games of bridge.

No one took the slightest notice of Tony and Christie, and the babble would have continued ad infinitum if Sherwood hadn't thumped on the table in the manner of a constabulary, demanding silence, with a grin.

There was a touch of colour on his face, at that moment, an astonishing revival of an interest in life. The neglected plant had been watered. The martyr had descended from the altar. The inferiority complex had been exorcised away.

"Well, ladies and gentlemen," he said, "having explained the reason of the voyage and won your acceptance of my invitation to join the trip, all that remains now is to show you how I intend to make it and on what." He paused for breath.

Whereupon, of course, Pollock took the floor. "On what?" he said sententiously, being a dramatic critic. "There's only one way to get to the South Sea Islands. I spent an hour at Cook's this afternoon. By aeroplane to France—"

"Not for Joe," cried Lady George. "Can you see my fourteen stone being wobbled across the channel in a fit?"

"Why not the boat from Dover?" said Lumley. "A comfortable train with a restaurant car to Paris—"

"Hopeless," said Pollock; "completely out of date. Now—"

But Sherwood thumped again. "My way or no way," he said, in a most uncharacteristic good temper.

"This is my show, I'd have you remember. The principals in the matter have left it all to me."

"Rather," said Tony. "I should think we have indeed."

"Of course," said Christie. "Very gratefully, too."

"There you are," said Sherwood. "So let all arguments cease. If I'd wanted any advice from Cook's, I could have got it. As it is, I'd like you to follow me."

And with a curiously gleeful chuckle he led the way to the door of his sitting room. It was closed, and when he threw it open nothing was to be seen, because all the lights were out. The wondering group at the door, murmuring, heard him fumble his hand along the wall to a switch. A most beautiful and surprising sight resulted.

Standing on a table against the darkness was a four-foot model of a graceful yacht of lovely lines; seaworthy even in the sight of a land lubber. There were lights in all her portholes, head and stern lights. She might have been steaming quietly through a breathless night.

No one said a word. There wasn't a movement.

Poor old Lady George stood open-mouthed, almost tearful, gazing. In all her life she had never been so fore-gone places, heard strange tongues, stood thrilled before the beauty of a yacht, and, what she had never hoped to realise her winging dreams. And the emotion and nerve rack of long war years in London, the terror of air raids, the daily accumulation of sights that had wrung her heart, strained her spirit, broken her temper, these had so often in the last few months made her pine for a change of scene, sent her imagination out on such a yacht as that.

Pollock and Lumley, who had both been tied to the deadly humdrum of the city streets, the former a slave of the inkpot, the latter at the mercy of an exacting wife, stood under enchantment, melting ozone, sensing freedom, feeling the vibration of steamy engines, outward bound.

As for Tony, r'veted, stirred too deeply to break the spell, he saw in this vessel the incarnation of a vital hope, the only means, the very miracle, that would lift him out of her defective presence and place him back in his appropriate past.

But Christie, if she hadn't immediately clapped her hand across her mouth, would have cried out. Oh, God, I'm frightened. I see nothing good about this ship. I will take us to tragedy, bloodshed, awful regrets, keep us too close to Teddy Sherwood. And she stood trembling, and presently buried her face against Tony's arm.

Then, having gained the dramatic effect that he had arranged with meticulous care, the triumphant Sherwood turned up all the lights in the room and brought his party down to earth.

"Something like, eh?" he asked "ougly." "A young liner, that's that, isn't it? Well, I've got her, I've got her, that's the word. She's lying at Southampton, every-thing shipshape. Been there since the Armistice. Was used in the for some purpose or other. I didn't care, so I didn't ask. She's owned by Lord William Sidcup who, you bet, is glad to let her.

REGAL FLOUR

BEST FOR ALL KINDS OF BAKING

It's a staggering price, but I'm not grumbling. May as well pay for a darned good bene while I'm at it, eh?"

They crowded round the model, peering into her portholes, fingering her shining hull, examining her bridge and life boats, amazed, like children, to find her decks deserted, the sudden disappearance of the illusion of sea.

Questions, never answered, flew like gulls from side to side. How many men did she require? How many knots did she make? Which was port and which was starboard? How did one go downstair? Where, after all, were the South Sea Islands? On and on.

If they had had the patience to listen to Pollock, who had spent several hours with maps and the encyclopedia, they would have taken home to bed the most exact information on all these points—distances, ports, definitions, climates, the history of the Islands, the customs and character of the natives, trade winds, currents, the equator. He had a remarkable memory, and even without a billiard cue, a table and a glass of water, was prepared to deliver a lecture such as would have done credit to an old sea dog.

Finally, the call of the whiskey bottle made itself heard, and Lady George led the way into the dining room. But not before she had drawn the reluctant Sherwood into an exuberant embrace, crying out, "You funny little three star Teddy. Kiss yer old Auntie, boy. And, oh, my gosh, doesn't it do the 'ear good to run across somebody who's got a bit of money to spend these days!"

It was a wonderful evening.

VII

But it did not end at that point. Sherwood remained in the sitting room, gazing over the yacht and the use to which he intended to put it. Very simple. Not in the least messy. Tony, encouraged to drink too much, would be invited to take the air before turning in. A dull night, choppy, starless, every one below. A sudden grapple—a heave—a splash. All over the head, the heater, marriage. That was the programme.

But, having made up her mind that something had been marked out to happen either on the voyage or the island, Christie turned at the door, shut it and went back. She felt that this was the moment to plant a definite and unarguable fact in the discarded mind of this man which would hamper whatever plan he had made for his evening revenge. She could see no other reason for his having seized that opportunity for getting the man he hated out to sea. And, in taking her course in both hands, she instinctively reverted to the days before the war, because she knew that Sherwood liked that better than the one that she had now acquired. It was to be a match- ing of wits.

Why had she shut the door? Was she going to attempt to throw a wrench into the machinery? It was no chance, to Sherwood's bitter annoyance, she was responsible for the party on the yacht. What was her idea now?

"Will you give me a moment, Teddy?"

"I'll give you everything I've got and work for the rest," he said, with the old craving.

She had expected that. She had only to be out of earshot and Tony or any one else and the volcano bubbled. Thank Heaven for the sound of voices. "If you haven't lost her habit of telling her truth, will you tell me something now?"

"It's not an easy habit to break," he replied. "I'll tell you what I know."

Low Temperatures In Northern Ont.

TORONTO, Jan. 17.—The Lake-tempered regions of Southern Ontario were comparatively balmy contrasted with the northern frigidness of famous White River, Ont., where early this morning a temperature of 50 below was unofficially reported. At the same time Toronto and district experienced an unusual drop. Private thermometers indicated from ten to fifteen degrees below zero in various parts of the city. Dilatory house-keepers found an epidemic of burst milk bottles and garage and motor repair shops were especially busy. The fuel men were swamped with rush orders.

At Lake Simcoe it was 22 below at Richmond Hill 16 below, while at St. Catharines, on the sunnier side of Lake Ontario, only four below was reported. Western Ontario offered various temperatures at from 2 to 12 below zero.

Bangor Still An Important Port

BANGOR, Me., Jan. 17.—Although Bangor has lost, probably forever, its one-time fame as a shipping point for lumber, it is still an important port. Nowadays most of the cargo are inward bound, as this is the big distributing point for Eastern Maine.

There were nearly 600 arrivals of vessels in 1926. They included many four and five-masted schooners and a large number of colliers. Instead of shipping out lumber as in the old days when sawmills lined the Penobscot River, Bangor brought in from Nova Scotia ports during the year more than two million feet of lumber. The only outbound lumber consisted of a few small cargoes of house finish to Maine coast ports.

In its heyday Bangor shipped from 150,000,000 to 250,000,000 feet of pine and spruce lumber yearly. The port swarmed with square-riggers and two and three-masted schooners. Now the pine is virtually gone and the spruce along the Penobscot headwaters is being converted into pulp and paper.

Coal and oil are the biggest items in the incoming cargoes. Last year coal receipts were 174,231 tons of bituminous and 64,455 tons of anthracite. Tankers brought in 200,000 barrels of gasoline, 35,500 barrels of kerosene and 258,000 barrels of fuel oil. Receipts of fresh fish were 74,000 pounds.

Four Children Burned to Death

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 17.—Four children, the eldest only four years old were burned to death in their home on Pellatt Street early yesterday when fire broke out in the absence of their parents. The victims were Matthew, four years; Josephine, three; Loren, 15 months and Emmerson, two months, the children of Mr. and Mrs. Augustine Geoffrey. The parents were visiting friends a short distance away and learning of the fire they returned to the house, but the father was prevented from entering the doomed house by the police, though he made several efforts.

The baby Emmerson was sleeping in a carriage not far from the kitchen stove which is thought to have started the blaze.

The three older children were in bed upstairs. Firemen who entered the second story by ladders found one of the children under the bed, two others were dead in bed and the baby dead in its carriage.
