TIMELY NOTES ON TOPICS CONNECTED WITH Silver Fox Farming

Lampson, Fraser & Huth's sale of general furs held in New York last week was like all sales this season, a success. Prices in most cases reached ceiling and many of the furs were 100% sold. Full silver fox, a fair collection showed a top price of $90 and was 50% sold. Wild mink was a poor collection, was 80% sold with a top price of $31.50. Ranched mink drew a top price of $30, and the offering was 90% sold. Beaver was 72% sold with a top price of $65.

A new blending process whereby blended muskrat and rabbit is reportedly made to simulate blond mink has been introduced on the New York market. The president of the company states this is the first time that the back of the muskrat has been made to simulate a natural mink while retaining the full bloom and beauty of the natural muskrat itself. If the process proves as satisfactory as the firm claim it may have the effect of lowering the price of mink.

The value of the production of raw furs comprising pelts taken by trappers and those sold from the fur farms of Canada for twelve months ending June 30th, 1942, was $24,532,918. The amount constitutes a high record for the fur trade as a whole.

Fur retailers throughout the United States are conforming with the wishes of the Government bureaus concerned with the orderly distribution of merchandise and have agreed to discontinue reference to co-operative prices and to the use of the word "sale." Instead they will use the words "event", "ceiling", "presentation", etc. They have also agreed not to use "scare" advertising which would include anything that would act as an inducement to consumers to buy.

Minnesota fur farmers held a great meeting at Duluth recently and by invitation the heads of great fox food manufacturing cold storage companies and other companies with connections among the fur farmers were present. Approximately 200 fur breeders from 17 States and two Canadian provinces were on hand and followed the proceedingly very interestedly. Dr. R. G. Green of the University of Minnesota, who has been outstanding in the production of vaccine for distemper in foxes, said that he is now devoting his major attention to perfecting a simple vaccine for the control of encephalitis. This disease is very common in western states and was to some extent in Manitoba. It is communicated by a type of fly to horses and other animals.

Dr. Green urged fur breeders to use extreme caution in preparing fur animal foods and especially substitutes for horse meat, rabbits and fresh water fish which have become necessary now. Fox food manufacturers who were there in quite large numbers, including Albert Leonard, head of Purina Mills, William T. Stautz of Kellogg Company, Glen Armstrong of Wisconsin Milling Company, etc., said there was an impending food shortage for all types of live stock, the seriousness of which will depend on crop production and the tenor of the war effort. Their opinion was that enough cereal foods would be available to maintain normal fox and mink population. They cautioned breeders not to become over-optimistic as a result of the good news from the fighting fronts and not to enlarge or expand the breeding animal population on their ranches.

The speakers generally agreed that a strong market for ranch bred furs will prevail the coming season but they cautioned the breeders against the evils of inflation and cited difficulties the government has encountered in trying to impose ceiling price regulations. President Arthur Sampson of the Minnesota Fox and Fur Breeders' Association, said there was a great need for a national federation of fur breeders organizations to co-ordinate the activities and aims of the entire industry. This made a great hit with those present and at his suggestion a national board of fur farming organizations was formed with 21 individuals named as a temporary board of directors to represent the organizations

After the meeting a banquet was held which was attended by 160 fur farmers and their wives and friends. Harry J. LaDue was the toastmaster. Among the speakers was W. O. Douglas of the Hudson's Bay Company's fur farm at Winnipeg, who described his fisher farming operations and predicted a great future for this new farm bred fur animal. Chris D. Lang, editor of Fur of Canada, told his audience that the future of fur farming is bright and alluring despite the difficulties in obtaining fur animals foods, marketing problems and labor shortages. He spoke entertainingly of his recent trip to the Canadian National Fox Breeders Association meeting in Prince Edward Island, the Cradle of the Fur Farming industry and extended the Canadian hand of good fellowship, of understanding and co-operation.

We mentioned in our notes recently of a visit by John B. Lewis of Owosso, Michigan, to his company's box farm at Marshfield near Charlottetown. We had the privilege of a few minutes conversation with Mr. Lewis, who is one of the brightest minds connected with the fox industry in the U.S.A. His interest in fox farming commenced some 27 or 28 years ago when he was associated with Joseph Callbeck of Summerside. Later, with Mr. W. Chester S. McLure, he established a ranch at Marshfield and this company expanded into the International Fox and Fur Farmers with ranches situated at or near Owosso, Michigan. Mr. Lewis' company will have some 3,500 pelts to take off this season and they are all silvers.

So far on the American ranches he has not succumbed to the lure of new types, neither white faces nor platinums, and polygamous mating is not practised. His reaction to the new types is that he considers his company is on the way to an era of prosperity by producing good silvers which are in great demand, and that he has not been sufficiently convinced that a change from this plan would be in their best interests. He is mindful of the lines written by the poet Pope — "Be not the first by whom the new is tried, Nor yet the last to lay the old aside." Anyhow we can assure our fur farmer friends that Mr. Lewis is a very astute gentleman who figures costs of operation very carefully and can tell you to the fraction of a cent what it takes for each particular item connected with the production of a silver fox pelt for 1942. He is a man of high principles and bears an excellent reputation in all his business dealings so that it is always a pleasure to have contact with him.

The two principal fox shows in Canada this season will be the Prince Edward Island Provincial Show at Charlottetown, November 8th to 12th, which will be judged by George A. Callbeck, Summerside, and the Ontario Fox and Mink Show to be held at Brampton, Ontario, November 15th to 18th, with the mink show November 19th and 20th. The dates for the Ontario pelt show have not been announced. Those for the Prince Edward Island pelt show are January 4th to 6th, with receiving date December 31st. The Provincial Live Fox Show at Charlottetown is expected to be the largest in years, due principally to the great expansion of new type foxes, particularly platinums. Many of the breeders feel that even though they may not be great prize winners yet information obtained by seeing their foxes in competition with those of others is worth the time and effort spent in attending the show and exhibiting.

In connection with the list of classes for the Provincial Pelt Show published last week, it may be mentioned that some suggestions have since been made asking that sections deleted from the Prize List be again included, particularly matched pairs, adults and pups, but that these be not shown in class. The reason certain sections were deleted was because of the confusion entailed where a pelt was shown in class and then had to be taken and matched up later on as in group or herd or pairs. The new regulations will do away with that and make the running of the show simpler and better. Efforts will be made from now on to interest all Island farmers in their own provincial pelt show and in this connection we may state that the larger the collection of furs, providing they have quality, the greater the advantage for the province and the better the prices that will be realized. Ontario has been building up its pelt show exhibits each year and they are now far larger than ours. There is no reason why this state of affairs should continue so we would urge everyone to get behind the show committee and contribute to the success of both the live and pelt shows.

Just a word of warning to those who have foxes on wire bottoms in sheds. From our own experience and from the experience of Ontario breeders it has been found that foxes not protected from drafts do not grow as good pelts as those that are. For that reason we advise every rancher to place boards around the bottoms of sheds commencing early in October.

VITAMIN REX WHEAT GERM OIL

has proved by a long record of results that it overcomes such breeding problems as frequent misses, absence of heat period, infertility, shy breeding, inactive males and false pregnancy. It is a potent, uniform and stable source of the essential reproductive factors present in fresh green foods, but which are lacking in average feeds due to loss through oxidative rancidity. Rex Oil is economical—four to five ounces is all that's required for complete treatment.
