BARBARA MEETS A REPORTER FOR THE FIRST TIME

CHAPTER CVIIL.

"What is it Neil?" I asked as soon as we were alone. "Are you ill, dear?"

"No! Nothing so simple as being ill. Barbara I can't tell you, you'll have to read it for yourself. That skunk Scott is trying to ruin me."

"Trying to ruin you, why?" I made no move to take the paper extended. I was too shocked at Neil's appearance now that I saw him in the lighted room. He looked like death, and I noted that he staggered as he walked. Yet he had not been drinking of that I was sure.

"Because he is a whelp!"

"But why Neil? He surely gives some reason."

"He says I cheated him. Why don't you take the paper and read what they say about your husband. How was I to take time to examine every property I handled. I took my risk, others had to take theirs. Then when they can't get a hundred percent on their investment, they squeal. Bah! I am sick to death of them all." He flung his hands out in a gesture of something very like despair.

"But Neil they can't take a man's character away like that." I was slowly unfolding the paper. It's outrageous! to say you cheated is false and I know it," as I said that every bit of blood seemed to leave his face, he was ashy gray, and trembling.

"But I may not be able to prove it."

"I don't care whether you can or not! I know it."

"Oh, Bab!" He covered his face with his hands as he sank into a chair.

"There dear don't worry, it will all come out right." The paper slid to the floor as I laid my arm around his neck.

"Read what they say, Bab, then you may not be so lenient in your judgment. They're not. They even bring you in for their miserable ranting. Gad, I'd like to get even with Scott for this. I am ruined Bab, ruined I tell you." He shook with dry sobs.

I was frightened, I did not know what to do. I stooped, raised the paper, opened it and read:

"John Scott, Western millionaire, accuses Neil Forbes, mining promoter." Then below: "Scott claims that Forbes induced him to supply money for digging wells when he, Forbes, did not even own the land. He also claims that Forbes' extravagance, his fine new house and expensive motor cars, etc., are purchased with the money of victims like himself who have given it to Forbes for investment upon his promise of large dividends. It is evidently the old shyster game of getting rich upon the credulity of the people. Forbes has overstepped himself, Scott says. And he will prosecute him unless every cent he has paid him, Forbes, is returned forthwith. There followed some more irrelevant stuff then: "Forbes had quite an extended clientele among people of small means who gave him their all because of his glowing promises. It remains to see what their attitude will be when they know he has swindled them."

I stood motionless with the paper clutched in my hand. A groan from Neil startled me.

"Why don't you say something?" he demanded. "Pretty isn't it?"

"No dear, it is not pretty, and I do not believe you ever intended to swindle anyone. But we must do something at once. Something to stop this—any more of it." A thought of Blanche Orton flashed through my mind. Suppose the papers got hold of her, the part she had played in helping Neil. No one would believe it was a business arrangement. My face burned as I thought of what people would say, what they would surely think. "Let us call up Frederick dear, perhaps he can do something."

"No, it's no use. He tried, and failed."

"But surely we can do something. Pay Scott every cent you have taken from him. Then he will be satisfied."

"I can't pay him. I haven't money enough. Then don't you see all the rest, when they see this, will be down on me like a pack of wolves. No I can do nothing but—" he stopped as the door bell jangled loudly.

"A gentleman to see you," the maid announced.

"Show him in," I told her, and she ushered in a brisk young man who said:

"I have come to get your side of this affair Mr. Forbes. I am on the Express Tribune."
