"These Women"
BY MALCOLM DUART

CHAPTER LX

Morton slowly took her hands, and sitting down at the desk, stood up, holding her from him.

"Nona," he said, "you are offering a woman's heart. But dear, I have nothing to give in return. Your love is fragrant and rich. My heart is dry, and covered with the scar of an old wound."

Her face began to twitch, as she saw what was coming.

"Don't cry, dear," he went on. "I'm only saying you from unhappiness."

"But I didn't ask you to marry me!" she cried. "I just offered myself to you, for you to do with as you wish. Throw me aside, when you're through with me!"

He shook his head, and lowered her hands. He still held to them, though, as he went on.

"Married or not, you would be exchanging your love for a dead blank. Our casual companionship has been a very pleasant one to me Nona, but what can I offer you? Money? You have it in your hand. Position? You are a great artist. I believe you are the greatest dancer in the world. Companionship? Why, instead of twenty years, Nona, I am centuries older than you! Heartaches, and heartbreaks have had their will of me."

He closed his hands, and they fell to her side. She barely could speak, her chin quivering, and her throat moving convulsively.

"You mean—you do not want me? That I shall go to London?"

On an impulse, he threw his arms around her and kissed her. Then, as suddenly, he moved away, her head on the desk, her arms loosely outflung before her.

"H closed the door, softly. "Don't go in there," he said to Parrish. "Wait until Nona comes out."

He sank on the hall chair, and sat thinking. The younger man watched him from the other man. "Is anything the matter, Mr. Morton?"

The older man shook his head. "Nothing," he said, "that you can help."

Parrish arose, and stood by him in concern.

"Something HAS gone wrong, sir," he said.

Morton, his head bent, sat without replying. Parrish looked uneasily about him. Then he heard the sound of a door opening above. Looking up, he saw Audrey. She was about to call to him, but he laid his fingers on his lips, and she looked across the railing, anxiously. The man in the chair, though her movements had been noiseless, became conscious of her presence.

He looked up. He tried to smile, but failed.

"Oh daddy—come up! Bring him up, Mr. Parrish!" Audrey cried, pointing something wrong with him."

Morton rose, and with Parrish's arm under his, slowly went up the steps, and into Audrey's dressing room. She took his other arm, and placed him in her own chair, beside the dressing table. Then she knelt before him, her arms lifted his knees, looking into his face. Parrish stood uncertainly near them.

Morton spoke, his voice husky. "Dearest," he said, "I've gone through a terrible scene. I had to hurt a loving girl—a girl who loved me."

She held his knees between her arms. "Nona?" she asked, softly.

He nodded. "I have—asked her to go to London," he said, uttering the words with difficulty. "She wanted to stay—with me. I lifted his hands, and let them fall. "But I have nothing to offer any woman, who wants to give her life to me."

His eyes, tired and heavy, lifted themselves to Parrish's. "We might, as well go ahead, and have it all over with. Parrish, you love Audrey, don't you?"

The younger man moved close beside him, resting his hand on the back of the chair. "I do love her, Mr. Morton."

"Do you want to marry her, Audrey?"

His heavy eyes turned to her. She pressed his knees again. "Daddy, if you are not going to marry Nona, I can't marry Mr. Parrish."

Morton stared at her, as if he had difficulty in comprehending. She repeated. "I have told him that he can't marry him—if you are to be here alone."

The older man made a visible effort to collect his faculties and his accustomed force. He straightened in his chair, and bent to the girl.

"I had my day of love, twenty years ago," he said. "This is your day now. Youth calls to youth."

He arose, and lifted Audrey to her feet. With his hand on Parrish's arm, he said:

"Parrish, her idea of marrying me is simply one of loyalty."

She gave a quick shake of her head. "But I love you daddy!" she cried.

He shook his head slowly. "Yes—but it is a different kind of love. You don't feel toward me as you do toward John here, do you?"

She looked from one to the other. "No, it isn't the same," she told him.

"Daddy—there is something a little sad in the love I feel for you. I feel as if you needed someone to comfort you, and help you. I've always done that for you, so hard, but I know—I'm a woman now—that you need someone to cherish you."

Morton stooped and kissed her. "It is impossible," he said. "Parrish, she is going to marry you. Take her, man—make her happy. Be good to her, for she is all I have in the world."

THE END

Stiff, Creaky Joints Become Supple Muscular Pains, Rheumatic Twinges Depart

After much study and experimenting, a chemist happily discovered that certain oils, herbs and essences had unusual power over pain. These pain-subduing substances were finally combined in a scientific manner under the name of NERVILINE. Those who have used it can tell you how quickly it sinks into the tissues and joints, how quickly it brings relief.

NERVILINE is just the thing for sore, stiff joints, whether in the knee, shoulder, elbow, ankle or hip. You'll be astonished at the warming, invigorating effect NERVILINE has on all sorts of rheumatic conditions.

As an all-round family liniment for sore throats, chest colds, strains and sprains, NERVILINE is about five times stronger than thick, oily preparations. Get a 35-cent bottle today.

WOMAN COULD HARDLY WALK

Mrs. Horn Tells how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health

Hamilton, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and would not be without it now. I had a female trouble so badly I could hardly walk and I was all run-down and could hardly get around to do my housework. I was in bed three or four days at a time. I was told by a friend to try your Vegetable Compound. I did, and by the time I took two bottles I was beginning to get around again. I took ten bottles in all, and now I am all right again and doing my own work. I have six grown-ups to work for, so I have plenty to do. I also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and I think it is good. But I owe my health to the Vegetable Compound, and I think if more of it was used women would be better off. I would not be without it if it cost much more."

Mrs. NEILIE HORN, 28 St. Matthews Avenue, Hamilton, Ontario.

Do you feel broken down, nervous and weak sometimes? Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent to take at such a time. It always helps, and if taken regularly and persistently, will relieve this condition.

Hard Pimples All Over Face

For About Three Years. Healed by Cuticura.

"I had trouble with pimples and blackheads for about three years. The pimples were scattered all over my face and were hard and red. They itched and burned a lot causing me to scratch and the scratching caused eruptions. My face looked so badly that I was ashamed to go out."

I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they helped me. I continued the treatment and in two months I was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Helen Budnik, R. 1, Box 11, Necedah, Wis., Sept. 27, 1924.

TREMENDOUS CONSERVATIVE DEMONSTRATION AT CARDIGAN

Hon. John A. Macdonald in Brilliant Address Reviews the Issues—Hon. Dr. MacMillan and Hon. H. F. McPhee Score the King Government—Meeting was Overwhelmingly Conservative.

As the campaign in King's County progresses it becomes increasingly evident that the tide is running more strongly than ever in favour of Hon. John A. Macdonald and the Conservative Government. At the Cardigan meeting on Tuesday night the high-water mark of Conservative enthusiasm was attained, when the electors of that district amid tremendous applause heard the issues of the present election campaign discussed by Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Hon. Dr. MacMillan, and Hon. H. F. McPhee, Minister of Public Works. The Liberal speakers, Messrs J. J. Johnston, Wade Hughes, J. P. McIntyre and Geo. E. Saville although given a courteous hearing, received a very small proportion of the applause, and the general consensus of opinion is that on the 14th of September, Hon. Mr. Macdonald will receive an even greater majority in Cardigan poll than in 1925 when the great food Macdonald 143, Johnston 26.

The meeting which was very orderly throughout was presided over by Dr. A. A. Allan.

Mr. J. J. Johnston, the first speaker, spoke along the same lines as at previous meetings, held throughout the county. Recognizing that he was speaking in Mr. Macdonald's own district he withheld the petty and insignificant utterances which have so far distinguished his addresses and confined his remarks to the tariff and the "Constitutional issue."

Mr. Johnston said that under Liberal rule we were trading with 251 millions more people than when Mr. Meighen was in power, but who they were he did not point out. He once more declared that Mr. Macdonald had voted against the budget and acclaimed the trade balance of 1926. He declared that the policy of the Liberal party was wider markets and declared that this was the purpose of the trade agreements with foreign countries.

He once more raised the "Constitutional issue," and blamed Mr. Meighen for obstructing "the best legislation since Confederation."

In his usual strong language he criticized the actions of Mr. Meighen and the Conservative party designating them dictatorial, autocracy, Hohenzollern practices, etc.

Hon. John A. Macdonald then took the platform amid the cheers of the audience. At the outset he thanked the people of Cardigan and the surrounding districts for the wonderful support given him last year.

"Mr. Johnston's remarks," said Mr. Macdonald, "as usual have very little foundation of fact. They are so twisted and distorted, that it is difficult to select the truth. As usual he has made mountains out of mole-hills, but we cannot dispute his right to do that for it is his habit as a clever lawyer to do so. I propose to give you the records and facts and to show you worthily." (Loud applause.)

Mr. Macdonald then told the audience how in 1925 Mr. King had asked for a dissolution of Parliament and was granted it. At that time he had stated that he had not a sufficient majority for his own party, and for the profit of the country. In the House that was returned, the Progressives were the dominant factor. To gain their support Mr. King had to adopt their platform. He tried to go to the Hudson Bay Railway Bill which was wholly for the benefit of the Western farmer, and which could not be put into force in any province unless the local government had the money to back it up, but in Prince Edward Island we can get a lower rate than that so it is of absolutely no use to us. The Old Age Pensions Bill which Mr. Johnston had acclaimed has been put up to catch the votes of the Labour members and had been voted against by Liberal Senators. The Hudson Bay Railway would never be of use for the purpose the Westerners want it but for local purposes only. The prove this Mr. Macdonald read a letter from the engineer in charge of the construction of the road.

Speaking on the Robb Budget, Mr. Macdonald declared that he considered a further reduction of the auto duties quite feasible provided that the Treasury could hold it. But the reason that the Conservatives have voted against the budget was that the Government had not played fair with the manufacturers. In 1925 they had promised to submit all such questions to a tariff advisory board but their assurances were not fulfilled. It was on this account that Hon. Dr. Manion had introduced an amendment and that the Conservative party had voted against the budget. Furthermore in 1925 Mr. Coote had introduced a resolution to the same effect, that of reducing the auto duties and every Liberal member in the House of Commons had voted against it, while some Conservatives had voted for it. The whole Western program, continued Mr. Macdonald, had been provided for in the Speech from the Throne, while we in the Maritimes had to get ours from a Royal Commission. The 236 items on which the Sales Tax had been reduced were not in the Budget, as all. The Robb Budget was a benefit only to the man who buys a car and the man who has over $2,000 income.

Regarding the tariff Mr. Macdonald said he was quite favourable to the foreign market, but it was only in the home market that we can sell our goods without a tariff. The policy of the Conservative party is to keep our home market for ourselves and to afford employment for our sons and daughters. The Sydney market which was formerly one of our best is now lost to us because of the King Government's tinkering with the tariff on iron and steel and had driven half the population to the States. Coming to the Customs Scandals which he described as the most important issue of all Mr. Macdonald pointed out that the rottenness of corruption of the department on which they had been censured had been known to the King Government for at least two years. These conditions had been destroying the business of certain merchants who had found themselves into the Merchants' Protective Association. They had hired detectives at their own expense who had collected evidence, put it before the Government and appealed for action. For a year and a half not a single step had the King Government taken to check these illicit practices until the evidence had been handed over to Mr. Stevens. From evidence submitted at the enquiry it was found that silks, cotton goods, linens, and all sorts of merchandise had been smuggled into Canada free of duty. All this had been condoned and connived at by Cabinet Ministers after they had knowledge of the conditions. From Halifax and St. John several hundred vessels loaded with liquor had obtained clearance for the West Indies and other distant points and within three or four days had been back for another cargo. Mr. King himself had acknowledged on the floor of the House that the loss amounted to $50,000,000 every year he was in power.

The Customs Report which had been presented by the Committee on which five out of nine members were the Government's friends had admitted that the conditions existing were deplorable.

Steven's Amendment, censuring the King Government and Hon. Mr. Bovin had been carried in the House by the votes of Progressives who had never before voted with the Conservatives, because they were driven by the force of the investigation, by the debauchery and rascality revealed by the force that
