Gzecks Hungry For Education

BY ADELAIDE KEER

NEW YORK, Dec. 26 (CP)—"In Czechoslovakia today the hunger for the printed word is stronger than the hunger for food." That report comes from Mrs. Jan Papanek, American-born wife of the Czechoslovakian minister plenipotentiary to the United States, who is also head of the Czechoslovakian Information Service in this country. The Papaneks have just returned from a two-month visit in Czechoslovakia.

"I saw constant evidence of that terrific hunger for information," Mrs. Papanek said. "There are four times as many students enrolled in Czechoslovakian universities and high rank technical schools now as there were 30,000 students compared with 8,000 before the war.

The professors are carrying four times as great a load of lecturers as they did formerly. They used to be the lecture class. Now their work is almost back-breaking.

In Prague the United States Information Service opened a reading room in a small store stocked with periodicals. All day long queues of students waited outside. From 800 to 1,000 people use it daily, poring over the publications and scribbling notes as fast as they can.

English Popular

"Remember that these periodicals are written in English. Many more people seem to have learned English during the war. In Prague I was invited to speak before the English Speaking Club, founded by university students. I accepted, expecting an audience of 50 or 70. I stepped into an auditorium jammed to the windows with between 800 and 700 students.

Czechoslovakia still faces a serious physical hunger problem, that only bread and potatoes are unrationed and that people eat a very small piece of meat a week. But she said that U.N.R.R.A. gifts of tractors, harvesting machines and cattle had enabled the people to plant some crops and stock some farms, and that the weather had better food conditions next year, though the present winter promises to be one of great privation.

Mrs. Papanek, a Chicagoan, is a graduate of Northwestern University and a former social worker. She met her husband in the early twenties during a visit to Paris and they were married several years later.

"The health of the Czechoslovakian children is one of the most serious problems in the country," Mrs. Papanek said. "A survey of the national Ministry of Health showed that three-quarters of a million children are suffering from malnutrition and resulting diseases. The children are still living in damp cellars and other unhealthy places. Because of the lack of transportation, many things many cannot be given adequate care. What the fate of these children will be no one knows."

Zulu Mother Hides Fact Son is King

WONGOMA, South Africa, Dec. 26 (CP)—The story of a mother who, to save her son's life, concealed evidence of his succession to a throne for 12 years was unfolded to the people of the Zulu nation at a meeting recently in this Natal town.

A great throng attended the old, now solemn, the Zulu minister of native affairs, Mr. Piet van der Byl, was to give the Zulus his decision on who was to be the Zulu king. For 12 years the Zulus had been ruled by Regent Mavimwen, brother of King Solomon da Dinuzulu, who died in 1934.

All this time there has been a rivalry between three sets each putting forward a claimant to the throne. All three rivals were sons of King Solomon—he had 47 wives, and no documentary evidence had been produced as to who should succeed King Solomon. He swept away the claims put forward by the three claimants.

Only recently did the mother of one Zulu prince, Cyprian, bring forward a letter written by Solomon before he died which declared: "You know it is not removed from my heart that you are the one to wear the Zulu crown, that he gave her this letter to keep in safety until he had put before the nation where he intended to show that my heir is indeed Cyprian Bekuluwu."

Cyprian's mother had carefully hidden the letter, fearing that some harm might befall her son were it known that he was the true heir to the Zulu throne. After the authenticity of the letter had been proved, the rivals found they had no case to put forward. Cyprian Zulu, a slim youth dressed in a blue pin-striped suit, stepped forward and was crowned the new king.

The new king, who is 20 years old, is now going to the Zulu Fort Hare. He is not the eldest son of the late King Solomon, but the Zulus have inherited the tradition of the eldest son assuming the throne.

The death occurred at his home, Morell Rear, of Mr. Peter Ryan, who had reached the age of eighty-eight. He was a life long resident in this vicinity and was in failing health for a long time.

Sincere sympathy also goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Arnold in the death of their little son only a few days old. He died on earth to bloom in heaven.

place for the Cancer Foundation. He was asked first to lecture at small medical colleges, then he found himself speaking at scattered places all over the country. Sometimes it was a small town in the middle west where he addressed a group of earnest women or it was a southern city endowed with a large audience. He found himself instructing a large and attentive audience, and once he spoke at an Indian Reservation.

He had a natural simplicity of manner and love of new people. He could, the pleased committee found, excite the interest of the little words everybody understood. And, most valuable, he actually spoke with the same frightened, ignorant sufferers to go to their nearest clinics and submit themselves to the necessary medical truths squarely. He was a modern Messiah, efficient, candid and rational. He swept away the cobwebs of superstition and moved men to regard the mechanism of their own bodies with almost the same interest they saw in the stars.

He dramatized physiological chemistry for eager ears, and thought they saw the meaning of the word cancer except in a sepulchral whisper pronounced it calmly now. He saw that the cancer was to be mastered. Help had arrived, they felt. And they humbly associated with his simple and lovable envoy from the East.

The press interviews were innumerable; newspapers could scarcely keep up with the demand that Cary had been a waiter and had renounced a promising career to enter service with the public health department. Every photograph somehow projected on the screen. Cary thought he looked like a movie actor and hoped he would give up the world's constant press and women flooded him with invitations to lecture. Many, many of them had heard of his name and came to hear the subject of cancer discussed in open daylight, among friends, without the glare of spotlights and the noise of a microphone. They were glad to see the doctor's face, his personality, his tastes, appearance and future. His flash on the screen was a sudden white meteor and all cameras were focused for the brief moment. And all the blame cameras were planning where to rush new shots after this latest meteor hit the earth.

Tam and Roger Dudley were happy and proud of their joint share in Cary's achievement. During his long absence they found themselves continuously talking of him—as if he were a glittering young star. They had just launched. If he was somewhat arrogant and self-centered when he returned at last for laboratory work, they smiled at each other with secret understanding. They even teased him about Barbara Grayling, who seemed to be his girl, a waiflike prodigy whom he had met in Michigan. She was working her way through medical school by scrubbing floors; she was going to specialize in tropical diseases. "Scrubbing floors?" said Roger, wrinkling his nose. "Do people scrub floors in this day and age? Dry mops and wax? Vacuum cleaners?"

"Laugh if you like," said Cary. "She's an ambitious child, a game kid. I've never met a woman who was so amazingly eager and frank and firm of purpose. Nothing can stop her. But I hate to think of the struggle she is going through. Can't we figure out some way to 'help her'?"

Tam was warmly interested in the touching story of poor Barbara Grayling, who felt benevolent and planned to do something for the girl. She even wrote to Constance urging her aid. "She is very brave," scribbled Tam, "and Cary says she is brilliant. I know you will help

In Memoriam

JOHN MARTIN MacLEOD

On December the eighth, at the age of eighty-three, John Martin MacLeod, one of Vernon's oldest and most revered citizens passed to his eternal rest. He lived quietly and happily with his family, friends and God, was always ready to utter the kind word and see the good in others. Mr. MacLeod was a loving and kind husband, a wise father, loyal friend, highly respected citizen, and a faithful elder, choir member and servant of his church. He was a wide reader and well versed in the English classics and religious literature. Well might it be said of him, goodness and mercy followed him all the days of his life and he shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

The funeral was held on December the tenth when many friends assembled to honour the departed and sympathize with the bereaved. There was a short service in the house, followed by a service in the United Church. The service was conducted by Rev. Roy E. Webster, assisted by Rev. Lewis M. Murray, grandson of the deceased. Mrs. H. J. Mulch fittingly rendered the solo Christian Good-night.

Interment was in the St. Andrew's United Church cemetery, Orwell.
