TIME AND DISHES

If you are in a hurry and wish to save yourself dishes, serve the meat on a large platter with the vegetables around it, much as planked steak is served. An attractive and appetizing arrangement and one that will save time in serving, not to mention the dishes, but do not try this on hubby with meat that must be carved.

Rub skillet with a cut clove of garlic before cooking port chops. This adds a subtle but delightful flavor.

EMERALD

Mrs. Sylvester Monaghan of South Melville spent a few days last week with her parents Mr. and Mrs. James Power, Emerald.

Mrs. Elizabeth Murphy has as her guest this week Miss Evelyn Flemming of Charlottetown.

The potato crop in this vicinity has been rather badly damaged by blight which has already destroyed many flourishing fields. Constant spraying does not seem to have the desired effect and a lot of hard work has gone for nothing.

Congratulations are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Green of Emerald on the arrival of a beautiful baby girl on Aug. 15th.

The many friends of Mrs. Thomas Hughes of Emerald will be pleased to hear of the improvement in her condition. Mrs. Hughes has been in the Charlottetown Hospital for the past seven weeks suffering from the effects of an unfortunate fall.

Mrs. Wm. Clark Emerald has as her welcome guests, Mrs. Wm. Sinnott and Mrs. Alfred Sinnott and children of New York.

A farewell reception was held last week for Mr. and Mrs. Evans of Massachusetts who have been spending some time on the island as the guests of Mrs. Egan's sister, Mrs. W. H. Deighan of Emerald.

Mrs. J. Austin Murphy of Emerald is spending a few days visiting friends in Charlottetown.

Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Murphy motored to the city on Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Deighan of New York and former Islanders here enjoyed a pleasant vacation here visiting many relatives and friends.

Mr. Merritt Callaghan of Ebbsfleet paid a visit to Emerald last week and was the guest of his sister, Mrs. Frank MacDougall.

The farmers of the vicinity are busy harvesting the grain crop, which appears to be good, with the exception of wheat, which is rusty.

Mr. Harry Turner, R. N. of the staff of Boston City Hospital, is visiting her mother, Mrs. James Tierney of New Haven, R. I.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Croken of Norboro attended the exhibition last week—R.

Patrons were Donald Watson and Lawrence Allen, stricken with appendicitis. When Alderman Cheesman left Port Arthur he had no money and spoke warmly of the territory. He had, however, communicated with the United States Immigration Department at Duluth and spoke warmly of the territory.

That didn't sound so good to me," said Alderman Cheesman, discussing the trip, "but in the next breath the official said, 'well, we'll remit it.'" Isle Royale is just beyond the United States border.

He asked for Struan, but turned at the sound of a lighter step and a girl's voice.

"Oh! Mr. Hall, I am glad that you've come! I do hope that you're really well again, but I can see how ill you've been."

Christie Ryland, both hands outstretched, spoke warmly to the stranger, but with only a shadow of her wide, merry smile. Her face was pale under its golden powdering of rosy cheeks, shadowed by a wide black hat. She looked older, too, and thinner—but perhaps that was only a result of the long, close-fitting lines of her black dress.

"Miss Ryland, are you . . . is this . . . Ryland touched her sleeve and the girl nodded, tears shining in her eyes so that they looked like sun-leaked pools.

"Yes . . . didn't you see in the papers that old Mr. O'Hara, of course I forgot how ill you've been. The boat that Mummy was in . . . it was found bottom upwards."

"More sorry that I can tell you, Miss Ryland."

She smiled in something like her old fashion.

"Not THAT any longer, Mr. Hall."

"Why—do you mean . . . ?" "Yes, Christie nodded. "Ranny and I were married quietly a month ago. You see, he wanted to be able to look after me, when we knew that mother had gone. I've not much to say about it, but I've cared much, so it seemed best to wait, just to be married quietly and quickly."

"Much best," Hall agreed. "And I congratulate you both with all my heart."

Miss Napoleon

moments had any personality amongst them stood out with any clearness.

Except that of Leonie Valence. Hall realized that he had been vividly aware of her the whole time, as though of a spark amongst grey ashes.

It seemed natural enough that it should be her voice which spoke suddenly.

"Look! Isn't that smoke over there—the smoke from a steamer?"

"Feeling under his hand, one of the sailors answered.

"Aye, that's about it, An' comin' this way."

Gradually on the greying horizon the dark smoke-plumes grew higher, spread away from the now visible funnels of the steamer, rose with her above the horizon, until she could be fully seen, bow and stern, speeding through the scene of the disaster, changing the whole aspect of things with dramatic quickness.

The light strengthened; through four other scattered boats could now be seen converging in the same direction. Feathery divers came from them; scarves and shawls were waved on the blades of oars to make certain that they would be seen by the rescuers.

But any such pitiful expedients were unnecessary. The newcomer was there for one purpose only, as the puzzled question from the bridge told them, coming like the bellow of a giant across the ice-strewn, wreckage-strewn sea.

"This is the steamer 'Calderon.' We picked up a wireless signal from 'Gloriana.' Where is she?"

"The nearest of the boats, tried to shout back, failed to make his voice carry, and answered with a gesture, his hands which were as eloquent enough.

The steamer, moving slowly, came within earshot. From the bridge her voice came, clear and keen-faced, edged down to them, and his natural voice could now be plainly heard.

"Lower the starboard gangway, Mr. Horne; get them aboard as soon as possible."

"CHAPTER VI
"SHE IS COMING TO INDIA!"

Wilson Hill's immediate reaction to the Gloriana disaster was a sharp attack of pneumonia.

Afterwards he only remembered vaguely the hours from a vast distance, the arrival of the rescue ship in port on a drearily wet day. His sole desire was to reach the island, to see his old friend just outside Liverpool.

When after all the drawn-out degrees of illness, weakness and weariness, Hall reached consciousness at last, it was with the edge of his feelings curiously dulled, and with something—perhaps a protective instinct—which held him back from retrospection. He did not want to talk about the Gloriana disaster, at present, did not want to see the newspaper reports or be reminded of it in any way.

Consequently it was not until he was practically well that his host rather deprecatingly produced some letters and scribbled telephone messages from his desk.

"Those all came during your illness," he said. "They're from ill-low-passengers of yours on the 'Gloriana, I believe. . . I wouldn't care you with them if they were any inquiries, but some of them are more than that."

Hall turned over the papers. Some were letters and some were reports of parative strangers, but there was a short note from Christie Ryland: "We're so terribly sorry that you are ill. Do let us know how you get on and come to see us when you're in town"—on the headed letter paper of a Kensington hotel. There was a visiting card from Struan, with inquiries scribbled upon the back, and the name of the hotel written above the printed address of his Service Club.

Within three days of Hall's arrival in London he sought out the Kensington hotel where Struan was staying, and there, in a comfortable atmosphere of Service people home on leave.

He asked for Struan, but turned at the sound of a lighter step and a girl's voice.

"Oh! Mr. Hall, I am glad that you've come! I do hope that you're really well again, but I can see how ill you've been."

Christie Ryland, both hands outstretched, spoke warmly to the stranger, but with only a shadow of her wide, merry smile.
